COGNIZANCE:—Where proceedings were commenced by the D. C. against an informer and made over to a Subordinate Magistrate for trial, and on his acquittal, the D. C. directed action against the consignor, it was held that the D. C. had acted under sec. 190 (c) and that the order was not an Executive order:—Shahiram v. Queen-Empress, 4 C. W. N. 825. In Charu Chandra v. Navendra, 4 C. W. N. 367, and Bishen Doyal v. Chedi Khan, Ibid, 560, it has been decided that if a Magistrate, having lawful cognizance of a case, finds from the evidence that others not before the Court are also concerned in the offence he can issue process and try them. The rule as to giving the complainant an opportunity of proving his case before instituting proceedings under I. P. C., sec. 211, as laid down by the Full Bench in Queen-Empress v. Sham Lal, 14 Cal. 707, is exemplified in Surat Chandra v. Aghore, 4 C. W. N. ccxxi. Where a Magistrate, after examining the complainant and without hearing witnesses or dismissing the complaint, ordered his prosecution under sec. 211, I. P. C., it was held that the order was without jurisdiction:—Mahadeo Singh v. Queen-Empress, 27 Cal. 921, see also Budh Nath v. Empress 4 C. W. N. 305. The principle laid down in Golapdy v. Queen-Empress, 4 C. W. N. 827; 27 Cal. 979, that if the District Magistrate has referred a case to a Subordinate Magistrate, and the latter discharges the accused, the latter alone can issue process against others not before the Court, is questionable. Under sec. 191 the District Magistrate transfers the "case" to the other Magistrate. But it is only the case as it is before him at the time that he can transfer. Thus if he takes cognizance of a case in which A is the only accused apprehended, and transfers the "case" to another Magistrate, what he does transfer is only the case against A, and what the other Magistrate tries is the case against A. If others are to be accused, and arrested the referring Magistrate seems the proper officer to issue process. The other Magistrate on the acquittal, discharge or conviction of A is functus officio, as regards the case; and it does not appear correct to say that the case is still before him, because the proceedings have terminated and there is in fact no case before him.

It has been held that the first Clause of sec. 191 is not limited to cases of offences:—22 Cal. 898. The second Clause relates to offences, and a first class Magistrate has no power to transfer a proceeding under sec. 145, Cr. P. C., but his act is not invalidated under sec. 529 (f):—Akbar Ali v. Domi, 4 C. W. N. 821.

SANCTION:—The difference between a sanction granted under sec. 195, and an order made under sec. 476, is that the former should be given only on application by some person who desires to complain and the latter is made by the Court on its own motion:—Durga Das Rakhit v. Queen-Empress, 5 C. W. N. 131; 27 Cal. 820; Thakur Tewary v. Empress, 4 C. W. N. 347; Banarsi Das, 18 All. 213; Baperam v. Gouri Nath, 20 Cal. 474: See also 7 Cal. 208, Prinsep, J.: 13 Bom. 384; Jardine, J: 16 Bom. 729: 20 Cal. 349, Pigot, J.: 7 Mad. 189: 23 Bom. 50, p. 55. A sanction proceeding ought to be so framed as to enable the High Court in revision to determine whether it is properly granted or not:—Kedanath v. Mohesh, 16 Cal. 661, followed in Pampapati v. Subba, 23 Mad. 210. No notice is strictly necessary before sanction can be granted: 12 Cal. 58: 18 All. 358: 10 Mad. 232, but the granting of sanction is a judicial act, and there may be circumstances where sanction without notice will be set aside on the ground of want of proper discretion, e.g., where difference of opinion exists between two Courts as to the propriety of granting it (Pampapati v. Subba) or where the Court granting it had not proper materials before it (10 Mad. 232: 10 Cal. 1100: 16 Cal. 661: 6 All. 98, 101, 114). Sanction without anything to show that the Judge had directed his attention to the real question in such cases, viz., whether there was prima facie case which would succeed was set aside:—Pampapati v. Subba; Thakur Tewary v. Empress, 4 C. W. N. 347. Sec. 195 gives power of revocation only in respect of a sanction but not as regards complaints made thereunder or orders passed under sec. 476:—Queen-Empress v. Ankanna, 23 Mad. 205. The High Court can set aside orders under sec. 476 in virtue of sec. 439: see 23 Cal. 610, p. 616, citing B. L. R. F. B. 716, 16 Cal. 730 and 20 Cal. 349, see also 23 Cal. 971: 16 All. 80: 21 Mad. 124. The cases in 18 Mad. 144 and 13 Bom. 109 were explained in these rulings and distinguished. Proceedings under sec. 182, without sanction were set aside in Amatulla v. Empress, 4 C. W. N. 366. Though the District Magistrate is the head of the Police, the sanction contemplated in sec. 195 (a) is that of some superior officer of Police:—Ramasroy v. Queen-Empress, 4 C. W. N. 594; 27 Cal. 452. Sec. 197 does not require a judicial enquiry prior to the grant of sanction, and no oath can be administered:—Queen-Empress v. Venkatrammanna, 23 Mad. 223. No sanction is necessary for the prosecution of a village Magistrate when he is not acting in the capacity of Judge or public servant:—Kendasami v. Soli, 23 Mad. 540.

COURT OF APPEAL.—BRENCHLEY v. HIGGINS. Before LORDS JUSTICES RIGBY, VAUGHAN WILLIAMS and ROMER. 8th November 1900.

The Defendant Higgins called himself a mortgage broker. The Plaintiff, a man 30 years of age, was entitled to a reversion of £4,000 under the marriage settlement of his parents, to devolve upon him on the death of his mother who had survived his father and was 72 years of age. He applied to the Defendant for a loan of £300, and in the result a deed, dated the 15th May 1899, was executed, which Plaintiff sought successfully to have set aside before Mr. Justice Farwell. This was the Defendant's appeal from the judgment of that learned Judge.

By the indenture sought to be set aside Plaintiff purported to assign to Defendant his whole reversionary interest, upon trust to pay a previous charge of £1,000, to retain for the Defendant's absolute use, £1,000 with 10 per cent. interest thereon per annum commencing from the date of Plaintiff's mother's death, to the date on which Defendant should receive the £1,000. The balance was to be paid to Plaintiff who for the whole of such transaction received £300 from Defendant as part of the same arrangement. Defendant gave to Plaintiff a letter agreeing to resell the £1,000 on receiving £600 from Plaintiff; time in that respect was to be of the essence of the contract. Mr. Justice Farwell had ordered the deed to be cancelled, on Plaintiff repaying to Defendant the £300 with 5 per cent. interest and as Plaintiff had offered to do that before action commenced he ordered Defendant to pay the costs of the action.

The COURT OF APPEAL supported that decision finding that besides the gross undervalue of the price given by the Defendant there had been "unfair dealing" and so the case did not fall within sec. 2 of the above Act.

CHANCERY DIVISION.—WARD v. TAYLOR (In re DE FALBE). Before MR. JUSTICE BYRNE. 27th November 1900.

Fixtures to freehold—Tapestries.

D'EYNCOURT v. GREGORY (L. R. 3 Eq. 382) noticed. NORTON v. DASHOOD (1896, 2 Ch. 497) followed.

This was a dispute about certain tapestries which at the death of the late Madame De Falbe were at the residence whereof that lady had been tenant for life. There were 10 pieces of tapestry in dispute, seven in the drawing-room and the rest in the hall.

The claimants were those interested in the said residence as part of the settled estates as representing the freehold interest, while ownership of the tapestries was also claimed by Madame De Falbe's executors and residuary legatees.

The learned Judge quoted the following passage from the late Lord Justice Chitty's judgment in the first-named case: "In considering any question of fixtures the important circumstances to be regarded are, (1) 'The mode of annexation of the article and the extent to which it is united to the freehold; (2) 'Its nature and, construction, i.e., whether it has been put up for a temporary purpose, or by way of permanent improvement; (3) 'The effect its removal will have upon the freehold.' After an examination of the evidence, the Court held, that those in the drawing-room had in effect been annexed to the residence while those in the hall were not attached to the fabric of the house in such a way as to constitute permanent additions to the house.

Mr. Levett, Q. C., and Mr. Methold for the freeholders.

Mr. Rowden, Q. C., and Mr. Howard for Madame De Falbe's executor.

Mr. Norton, Q. C., and Mr. Wilkinson for her residuary legatees.

On the 7th February 1901 in

THE COURT OF APPEAL—Lord Justices Rigby, Williams, and Sterling reversed Mr. Justice Byrne's decision in the above case on the appeal of the representatives of Madame De Falbe which appeal was limited to the drawing-room tapestries. In the course of the judgment Lord Justice Rigby said he had great difficulty in following the decision of Lord Romilly in the above case of D'Eyncourt v. Gregory. The other case Norton v. Dashood was materially different from the present one. The Courts had of late relaxed invariably the rule quid quid plantatur solo solo cedit. These tapestries had been affixed to the freehold for the purpose of being enjoyed as chattels, and not for the improvement of the freehold. In the case of Norton v. Dashood the tapestries had belonged to the house for generations, they were so attached to the freehold as to be not removable. Here what was done was all that was really necessary for the enjoyment of the tapestries as chattels; that was a complete answer and the appeal would therefore succeed.

QUEEN'S BENCH DIVISION.—QUEEN ANNE MANSIONS, LIMITED v. BUTLER. Before MR. JUSTICE WILLS. 3rd November 1900.

Hotel-keeper—Negligence—Substantial consideration—Bailor.

The substantial question in this action arose on the counter claim made by the Defendant Butler, for the loss of a trunk containing wearing apparel, &c. Mr. Butler was an accountant and had to travel backwards and forwards between London and Clifton for some months. He resided while in London at the Plaintiff Company's premises. By arrangement with the manager he used to leave a box containing clothes, &c., at the Mansions while he was away. The manager agreed that he should do so on his giving notice to the hall-porter. On the last occasion he returned to the Mansions the box was missing. The value claimed was £38. Evidence was given by the hall porter, who swore that on the last occasion the Defendant Butler had not informed him of having left the box, that the Defendant had told him that he had told a page boy to take the box down to the box room and had given him a shilling. The page boy denied this. The learned Judge gave credence to the Defendant's statement, found that there had been negligence on the part of the Plaintiff Company, that they had taken charge of the box for a valuable consideration and were liable.

Mr. Atkin for the Plaintiffs.

Mr. Powell for the Defendant.

CALCUTTA HIGH COURT.

[TESTAMENTARY AND INTESTATE JURISDICTION.]

SUIT NO. 5 OF 1900.

STANLEY, J. 1901. 21, February.	} In the goods of MATHURA MOHAN BISWAS, deceased.

Application to extend the time for filing Paper-book—Sec. 553 of the Civil Procedure Code—Rule 176 of the Rules and Orders of the High Court.

In this case an appeal being No. 35 of 1900 was filed on the 15th of December last, and the usual notice was issued by the Registrar but not served on the Defendant. On the 14th instant an application was made before the Hon'ble Mr. Justice Harington to extend the time for filing Paper-book which was to expire on the next day, but the matter was adjourned till to-day. The Appellant served the notice on the Respondent on the 20th instant.

An application was made by Mr. Avetoom in Chambers on behalf of the Appellant for extending the time for a further period of two months for filing his client's Paper-book, he having got an affidavit to the effect that owing to adverse circumstances his client could not find money for payment of office copies of the voluminous evidence and papers to be printed herein.

Mr. Hyde on behalf of the Respondent argued that under sec. 553 of the Civil Procedure Code the process governing the issue and service of notice of appeal on the Respondent is the same that governs those of summons and accordingly the Appellant not having complied with Rule 176 (Belchambers' Rules and Orders, 2nd edition) by taking out the notice from the Registrar's office and delivering the same to the Sheriff for service within the 14 days mentioned in that Rule, the appeal should have been struck off. He also relied on Rule 11 of the Appellate Side Rules (ibid).

Mr. Avetoom in reply said that the practice of the Court had not been such as had been made out by his learned friend and that whether Rule 176 should be read along with sec. 553 of the Code in the manner his friend has done is a debateable question.

Held—That under the special circumstances of the case and the application having been once entertained and adjourned a reasonable time (one month) should be granted.

Babu Opoorba Coomar Ganguly for the Appellant.

Messrs. Watkins & Co. for the Respondent.

[TESTAMENTARY AND INTESTATE JURISDICTION.]

HARRINGTON, J. 1901. 13, February.	} In the goods of PEARYMONEY DASSEE, deceased.

Construction of Will—Authority to sell not necessarily an authority to mortgage—Leave under sec. 90 of the Probate and Administration Act, as amended by Act VI of 1889.

The deceased who was a Hindu inhabitant of Calcutta, governed by the Bengal School of Hindu Law, died some time in January 1890 having published his last Will and testament whereby he appointed the applicant, Beni Madhub Dass, his sole executor and first shebait of the Thakurs with all the powers therein mentioned. The material clauses of the Will were:—

"(c) Out of the rents and profits of my immoveable estate in the first place to pay the ground rent and other rates and taxes for and on account of my houses and premises No. 23, Wooma Churn Das' Lane, &c., &c., and in the second place to meet the expenses of the deb sheba of my family Thakur Sree Sree Radhaballuvjee, &c., to whose service I hereby entirely dedicate all my moveable and immoveable estates," and (d) "if in the opinion of my said executor by reason of Government acquiring my lands and premises or by reason of saving my lands and premises from being deteriorated in value or by reason of improving the estate for the said deb sheba it seems advisable to him or to his successor or successors as executor to carry or dispose of the whole or any portion of my estate and properties he or they are hereby authorised to do so. The sale-proceeds will be invested in any way he or they would think proper and the income or profits from such investment will be devoted towards the said deb sheba."

Babu Peari Lall Halidar applied in Chambers on behalf of the executor for grant of probate of the said Will and for leave under sec. 90 of the Probate and Administration Act, as amended under Act VI of 1887, to mortgage one of the properties belonging to the estate of the testator. It was submitted on behalf of the applicant that the testator by giving express power of sale and direction for disposal of the sale-proceeds has impliedly restricted the power to mortgage and that therefore it is necessary to come before the Court to obtain leave as aforesaid and that the general terms of the Will leads to the same conclusion. He cited Kanti Chandra Chatterpadhya v. Kristo Churn Acharjee (3 C. W. N. 515) and an unreported case "In the goods of Doorga Mohun Das, deceased (Sale, J.)."

Probate of the Will granted and the executor was given leave to mortgage as prayed for.

SUIT No. 312 of 1898.

STANLEY, J.	}	ANNO DASSEE
1901.		?
21, February.		PITAMBUR DUTT.

Attorney's lien for costs—Costs due to an attorney by a pauper—Change of attorney—Belchambers' Rules and Orders, Rule 792.

This suit was instituted by the Plaintiff in forma pauperis through Babu Bepin Behary Bonnerjee for recovery of certain stridhan articles wrongfully taken from her by the Defendant and for other reliefs. That suit was dismissed on the 17th day of December 1900. The Plaintiff was now desirous of filing an appeal through Babu Jyoti Prosad Ghosh.

Babu Jyoti Prosad Ghosh applied in Chambers on summons for an order for change of attorney from Babu Bepin Behary Bonnerjee and for delivery of the cause papers without payment of costs upon the strength of Rule 792 of Mr. Belchambers' Rules and Orders (2nd edition). It was submitted that the said rule was very clear and the practice of this High Court founded thereon has been not to allow the costs of a pauper to his attorney on a change from him.

Babu Bepin Behary Bonnerjee (contra) submitted that this being an action on trover and the hearing having lasted for several days, large amount of work had to be done and accordingly costs became heavy and if an order for change be made without payment of costs he would not be able to reconp himself in case the appeal is decided in the Plaintiff's favour with costs. He further submitted that the rule under consideration does not affect in any way the attorney's lien for costs under which he holds the cause papers and consequently a pauper's case should not be distinguished from that of an ordinary suitor and accordingly a change in this case ought to be made upon the usual terms. He referred to an order made by Jenkins, J., on the 3rd day of June 1898 (in the unreported case No. 813 of 1896, Harry Dass Dass v. Nitganando Dass) by which His Lordship held that the order for change of attorney of a pauper could only be made on the usual terms, viz., upon payment of costs.

Held—That the application was not free from difficulty inasmuch as by Rule 791 no costs are to be allowed to the pauper against the opposite party except by special order, and by Rule 792 no fees shall be payable by a pauper to his counsel or attorney; considering, however, that the Appellate Court might order costs to be paid to the pauper it would be unreasonable to allow a change in this case except on the usual terms, that is, upon payment of all costs which might have been incurred by the attorney.

Upon Babu J. P. Ghosh personally undertaking to pay such costs as might be awarded by the Appellate Court in respect of the work and services rendered by the attorney on the record, if recovered from the other side and on Babu B. B. Bonnerjee agreeing to accept such an undertaking an immediate order for change was made.

Babu Bepin Behary Bonnerjee, Attorney on record.

Babu Jyoti Prosad Ghosh, Attorney in the application.

This was a suit for recovery of certain sums of money against the firm of Tejnarain Singh & Son on account of breaches of several contracts entered into by the firm of Tejnarain Singh & Son for the purchase of gunny bags of certain qualities manufactured by the Plaintiff. The contracts upon which the suit was brought were entered into by Tejnarain Singh deceased prior to his death (which took place on the 11th May 1898) in the name of the said Tejnarain Singh & Son which business was carried on by him for himself and his son the Defendant Deep Narain Singh constituting a joint Hindu mitakshara family.

The plaint was filed against Deep Narain Singh after Tejnarain's death, praying (a) judgment for sums of money therein mentioned, (b) that if necessary an account may be taken of the estate of the said Tejnarain Singh deceased and the said estate administered under the decree of this Hon'ble Court, (c) that if necessary the Defendant may be ordered to account for the assets of the said deceased which came into his hands and to pay and make good to the Plaintiffs out of his own moneys the value of any such assets as came into his hands and was disposed of by him. The suit when filed was entered in the General List of Causes.

• Mr. Sowton for Messrs. Sanderson & Co. applied in Chambers for an order that the suit may be transferred from the General List of Causes to the General List of Commercial Causes and that the costs of and incidental to this application be costs in the cause, on the ground that the claims in this suit arise out of ordinary mercantile transactions.

Mr. Pugh (contra) submitted that as the Plaintiffs asked for an administration of the deceased's estate the suit could not be placed in the General List of Commercial Causes.

Held—That this is not a proper suit to be placed in the General List of Commercial Causes and the application should be dismissed with costs.

[CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION.]

APPEAL FROM ORDERS NOS. 284 AND 301 OF 1900.

RAMPINI, J.	} MUSST. JIGRI BEGUM and anr., Objectors, Appellants, "SYED ALI NAWAB, Respondent.
SALE, J.
1901.
27, February.]

Succession Certificate Act (VII of 1889), sec. 7—Enquiry, nature of—Act IX of 1841, decision under—Legitimacy, Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), sec. 141—Practice.

This was an appeal preferred on the 1st of August 1900, against an order of A. Goodeve, Esq., District Judge of Zillah Tuhbat, dated the 28th of July 1900, granting to one Syed Ali Nawab on behalf of Musst. Majimunnessa Begum a certificate under cl. (4) of sec. 7 of Act VII of 1889, for the collection of a debt due to the estate of the deceased Syed Mahomed Ali Khan. There were three applicants (1) Syed Ali Nawab the brother of the deceased and the guardian of the alleged minor daughter, (2) Musst. Jigri Begum another daughter of the deceased (3), Musst. Umatul Mehdi the widow.

The lower Court was of opinion that the third applicant was not a fit person to whom a certificate should be granted and that her interest was small; that Musst. Jigri Begum (who was the present Appellant) was a puṣṭanashin lady and as such was unable to manage her own affairs and that she was not a fit person to whom a certificate could be granted. The lower Court granted certificate to Syed Ali Nawab the Respondent in the present appeal whom it found to be a respectable and trustworthy man who was also the guardian of Majimunnessa the alleged minor daughter of the deceased.

The present Appellant contended in the Court below that Musst. Majimunnessa was not the legitimate daughter of the deceased.

It was contended in appeal that the order of the learned Judge of the lower Court was bad because it had been passed without enquiry whatever and the following cases were cited, in support of the contention that certain enquiries must be made under the provisions of sec. 7 of the Succession Certificate Act before a certificate could be granted: Hurri Krishna Panda v. Balabhadra Panda (I. L. R. 23 Cal. 431), Radha Rani Dassi v. Brindaban Chundra Bosak (I. L. R. 25 Cal. 320), Sivamma v. Subbamma (I. L. R. 17 Mad. 477), Dharmaya Sangappa v. Sayana Malapa (I. L. R. 21 Bom. 53). It was also contended that the lower Court entirely neglected the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure and decided the case without enquiry and after perusal of documents not filed in the case or admitted in accordance with the provisions of sec. 141, C. P. C.

One of the documents upon what the lower Court relied was a decision in a case between the parties under Act XIX of 1841. In that case the District Judge said as follows:—Since Syed Mahomed Ali, gave, and Syed Ali Nawab took Majimunnessa Begum in marriage to the latter's son as daughter of Syed Mahomed Ali Khan, I must assume that they knew what they were doing and that she is legitimate."

Held—That although the District Judge had not dealt with the documents in accordance with the provisions of sec. 141, yet although the decision under Act XIX of 1841 would not have the effect of res judicata still, it having been passed in the presence of the parties to the case, it was admissible in evidence before the Judge and on the strength of which he was justified in saying that Musst. Majimunnessa appeared to have been recognised as the daughter of the deceased during his lifetime and was married as such to the son of Syed Ali Nawab.

That the decision is a public document and could be proved by means of a certified copy.

That the enquiry is to be a summary one and as the Judge had legal evidence before him on which he came to the conclusion at which he arrived, the proceedings cannot be set aside because they seem not to have been of a very protracted or detailed nature.

Sur Griffith Evans and Moulvie Mahomed Yussuff and Babu Saroda Churn Mitter for the Appellants.

Babu Umakali Mookerjee and Moulvie Mahomed Mustafa Khan for the Respondent.

Appeal dismissed.

REPORTS (See Index.)

WE REGRET TO ANNOUNCE THAT MR. JUSTICE HILL is obliged to proceed home owing to ill health. It was a matter of wonder with us how he could go on with his work after the calamity which befel his family about the time the Court re-opened. He was always at his work, which was very heavy, being one of the Judges who heard the Original Side appeals, always paying the closest attention to the matters before him, never for a moment showing any sign of weariness or irritation. This heavy work has told upon his health. We wish him speedy recovery.

THE CALCUTTA BAR GAVE A FAREWELL DINNER TO Sir William Macpherson, last Thursday, 15th March. No other guest was invited. The dinner was largely attended and was in every way a great success. The Advocate-General proposed the health of the guest of the evening in appropriate terms and the reply by the retiring Judge was much appreciated. When Sir Comer Petheram sent Mr. Justice Macpherson to the Original Side, the Bar did not quite approve of the innovation, but after a few days' experience of the Judge, opinion became unanimous in his favour. Always patient and courteous, thoroughly conscientious in the discharge of his duties, a perfect master of facts, and ever ready to do justice to the parties, he soon became a favourite and everyone considered it a pleasure to appear before him. During his long service in this country, for nearly 45 years, during sixteen of which he has been a Judge of the High Court, he made many friends and the Government has also shown its appreciation of his character and ability by conferring upon him a Knighthood. We wish him all happiness and can assure him that we are giving expression to the feeling of the profession in doing so.

WITH THE INCREASE OF PLAGUE IN CALCUTTA WORK is beginning to suffer. Applications to put off cases on account of illness of the parties or their witnesses are being almost daily made. In one case a commission to examine a Hindu lady had to be put off as the neighbourhood of her residence was stated to be largely infected. We hear that there has been a considerable falling off in the number of new suits in the High Court, but more so in the Court of Small Causes. One redeeming feature however this year is that there is no panic.

APPEAL FROM ORIGINAL DECREE

No. 300 of 1898.

SREKUTTY JOGEMAYA DASSI

Landlord and tenant—Suit for recovery of rent—Liability or otherwise of a purchaser of property for rent falling due before the date of confirmation of sale—Priority of contract and of estate—Personal liability—Joint-liability with other ijaridars—Release of some of several promisors, whether a release of all—Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882), secs. 28 and 316—Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885, B.C.), secs. 17 and 88—Indian Contract Act (IX of 1887), sec. 44.

This was an appeal, preferred on the 5th of September 1898, against the decree of Babu Prasanna Kumar Ghose, Rai Bahadur, Subordinate Judge of Nuddia, dated the 30th of June 1898.

This appeal arose out of a suit brought by Girindra Nath Mukerjee and others, Plaintiffs-Respondents, for arrears of rent due from 1296 to Poush 1299 on account of eight annas share of an ijara lease of certain estates and shares of estates held by the Defendants, representatives of one of the original lessees, late Saroda Prasad Mukerjee, under the pro forma Defendant No. 7, Tarini, alias Shoyamoni Debi. The Plaintiffs claimed to recover the rent in virtue of an Arpannamukh, or deed of assignment, executed in his favour by the said Shoyamoni on the 3rd Kartik 1297. It was alleged that under the terms of the ijara lease, the ijaridars were bound to pay the Government revenue payable on account of the estates held in ijara, but by reason of the Defendants' default, the Plaintiffs had to make two payments of revenue and they now sought to recover the amount of those payments also. The total amount claimed was Rs. 9,443-2-8 after deducting certain payments made by some of the Defendants and the amount was sought to be recovered by sale of certain properties mortgaged by the ijara karniat; and Defendants Nos. 9 and 10 were made parties as purchasers of certain property which had been hypothecated by some of the lessees as security for the rent.

The Defendant No. 7, Shoyamoni, died pending the suit.

The Defendants Nos. 1, 2, 3, 5, contended, inter alia, that the Arpannamith which was the basis of the Plaintiffs' claim was invalid and ineffectual, and no claim could be founded upon it and that the suit was bad for misjoinder of causes of action. Defendant No. 6, Nistarini Dassi, contended that her deceased husband being the auction-purchaser of only a portion of the ijara tenure from Poush 1298 she was not liable for the previous rents, that the suit as against her was not maintainable jointly with the remaining Defendants.

The suit was dismissed by the Subordinate Judge on the ground that the Arpannamith was a mere power-of-attorney which did not authorise the Plaintiff to maintain the suit. That decision was reversed by the High Court on appeal, the Arpannamith being held to be a deed of assignment and the case was remanded to the Court below for trial on the merits.

After the remand the only Defendants who contested the suit were the representatives of Defendant No. 6, who had died in the meantime, and whose defence was to the effect that her husband having purchased at an execution sale confirmed on the 15th December 1891, only two out of the several properties covered by the lease, she was not liable for the rent for any period before that date nor for the rent for any of the properties other than those two. The Defendants Nos. 9 and 10, having pleaded non-liability on the ground of being bona fide purchasers for value and on other grounds, the Plaintiffs abandoned their claim against them. The Subordinate Judge overruled the objections urged in the defence of Defendant No. 6, and decreed the suit against the principal Defendants.

Against that decree the representatives of Defendant No. 6 Jogennaya Dassi, Padmabati Dassi, and Bhabhabhagini Dassi preferred this appeal, and it was contended on their behalf, first, that the Court below was wrong in holding that the Appellants were liable for rent for any period before the 15th December 1891, whereas it ought to have held that they were not so liable, and that the suit was, not maintainable for misjoinder of parties and of causes of action; secondly, that the Court was wrong in holding that the Appellants were liable for the whole rent jointly with the other Defendants, whereas it ought to have held that they were liable only for a share of the rent proportionate to their interest in the properties leased; and thirdly, that the Court below ought to have held that the Plaintiffs having released Defendants 9 and 10, the holders of the property hypothecated as security for the rent, the Appellants were discharged from liability for rent except so far as rent was due for the portion of the ijara mehal held by them.

On behalf of the Plaintiffs-Respondents, it was contended that the Appellants' predecessor in interest having purchased the property that was liable to pay rent, the purchase must be held to have been made subject to liability for the rent that was due, and that the other contentions of the Plaintiffs-Appellants, were not sound.

Held—That neither by privity of contract nor by privity of estate could any liability attach to the Appellants for rent falling due before their interest in the ijara mehal accrued, that is, regard being had to sec. 316 of the Code of Civil Procedure, before the sale at which their predecessor made his purchase was confirmed.

Rash Behary Buntopadhyaya v. Peary Mohun Mookerjee (I. L. R. 4 Cal 346) followed.

Chhatrapat Singh v. Girindra Chandra Roy (I. L. R. 6 Cal. 389) and Mahurane Dussya v. Harendra Lal Roy (1 C. W. N. 458) explained and distinguished.

That though the Appellants are not personally liable for the rent that fell due before Poush 1298, the portion of the ijara mehal held by them being liable for that rent, they are rightly joined as Defendants in respect of the whole claim, regard being had to the provisions of sec. 28 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

That though the privity between the parties may be one of estate only, it is in respect of the whole of the tenure though the transfer was of a part, by reason of the indivisibility of the tenure without the landlords' consent.

Shib Das Banerjee v. Baman Das Mookerjee (15 W. R. 360), Hare v. Cator, (Cowper 766), Holford v. Hatch (1 Douglas 182-188), and Curtis v. Spilley (Bingham, N. C. 756) distinguished.

That the release of Defendants 9 and 10, some of several joint promisors, does not release the Appellants, other promisors from their liability.

Heera Lal Samant v. Sydul Ozeer Ali (21 W. R. 347) distinguished.

Dr. Rash Behari Ghose and Babu Shiba Prasanna Bhattacharjee for the Appellants.

Babus Basanta Kumar Bose, Harendra Nath Mukerjee, Hara Prasad Chatterjee and Hari Churn Sarkhel for the Respondents.

APPEAL FROM ORIGINAL DECREE
NO. 115 OF 1898.

BANERJEE, J.	RAJ JATINDRA NATH CHAUDHURI and
STEVENS, J.	another, Defendants, Appellants,
1900.	v.
8, March.	AMRITA LAL BAGCHI and others
	Plaintiffs, Respondents.

Hindu Law—Adoption—Hindu widow, adoption, by, of a second son upon the death of a son, begotten or adopted, whose estate she inherited as mother, whether divests her of her estate—Review of the law on the subject—Principle underlying such an act—Declaratory decree given on a case not made in the plaint and inconsistent with it, whether proper.

This was an appeal, preferred on the 6th of April 1898, against the decree of the Second Subordinate Judge of Zillah 24-Pergunnahs, dated the 11th January 1898.

This appeal arose out of a suit brought by Amrita Lal Bagchi and others, Plaintiffs-Respondents, to recover possession of certain immoveable property known as Nune Bheri, which consisted of 915 bighas and odd land comprised in taluk Dhapa Manpur, on the allegation that it belonged to one Pran Kissen Bagchi, who died in 1852, leaving his widow, Lobongomoni Debi, as his sole heiress; that upon the death of Lobongomoni on the 21st Magh 1302 (corresponding to February 1896) the Plaintiffs, as the nearest agnates and heirs of Pran Kissen Bagchi, became entitled to the property as reversionary heirs; that Jatindra Nath Chaudhuri and Harendra Nath Chaudhuri, Defendants Nos. 1 and 2, have been holding possession of the same by setting up a lease purporting to have been granted by Lobongomoni Debi on the 30th Srahan 1264; and that the said lease was inoperative after the death of Lobongomoni Debi, there having been no legal necessity for the granting of the same, and the Plaintiffs were consequently entitled to possession. A lady, named Sukhodamoni Debi, was made one of the Defendants in the suit on the ground that she had been setting up a right to the property as the widow of one Kali Nath Roy upon the false allegation that Kali Nath had been adopted by Lobongomoni under an authority from her husband.

The defence of the Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 was that the Plaintiffs were not entitled to recover possession as the reversionary heirs of Pran Kissen Bagchi, as Lobongomoni Debi, with the authority of her husband, adopted Kali Nath Bagchi as her son and the estate of Pran Kissen Bagchi vested in Kali Nath, and upon Kali Nath's death, was inherited by his heir Sukhodamoni, that the mourasi lease under which the Defendants held was a valid lease and binding on the reversionary heirs of Pran Kissen Bagchi and of Kali Nath as having been granted under legal necessity; and that the claim of the Plaintiffs was barred by limitation.

The Defendant No. 3, Sukhodamoni Debi, filed two contradictory statements, in the earlier of which she supported the Defendants Nos. 1 and 2, but in the later one she supported the Plaintiffs. The Subordinate Judge found that Pran Kissen Bagchi gave permission to his widow to adopt two sons in succession; that the widow Lobongomoni first adopted a boy, named Baikanto, and on Baikanto's dying unmarried, she adopted Kali Nath and had him married to Sukhoda and that Kali Nath died at the age of sixteen leaving his adoptive mother and his widow him surviving. The Subordinate Judge further found that the lease of the Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 was not shewn to have been granted under legal necessity and upon these findings the Subordinate Judge dismissed the Plaintiffs' suit for possession but gave them a declaratory decree, declaring that the lease to the Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 was granted without legal necessity and was not binding upon the reversionary heirs of Pran Kissen Bagchi and Kali Nath Bagchi.

Against that decree the Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 preferred this appeal and it was contended on their behalf that the Court below was wrong in granting the Plaintiffs a declaratory decree upon a case not made in the plaint and in fact inconsistent with the case made in it and that the Plaintiffs' claim for a declaratory decree was barred by limitation under Art. 125 of the 2nd schedule of the Limitation Act.

The Plaintiffs preferred a cross-appeal which was abandoned at the hearing. It was contended, however, on their behalf that upon the facts found by the Court below, the estate left by Pran Kissen Bagchi having passed to the first adopted son and on his death to his adoptive mother Lobongomoni Debi by inheritance, the second adoption could not divest Lobongomoni of her rights, and as Kali Nath, the second adopted son, died in the lifetime of Lobongomoni, the estate remained in Lobongomoni and the Plaintiffs as reversionary heirs after the death of Lobongomoni were rightly entitled to the declaration that was granted in their favour.

Held—That a Hindu widow adopting a son under the authority of her deceased husband, upon the death of a son begotten or adopted, whose estate she inherited as mother, divests herself of that estate by the act of adoption in favour of the son last adopted by her, and that the second adopted son takes the estate immediately upon his adoption. Bhubannoyi v. Ram Kishore Achary Chowdhury (10 Moo. I. A. 279), Vellam Venkata Krishna Rao v. Venkata Rama Lakshmi (I. L. R. 1 Mad. 174) followed.

Janabai v. Roy Chand Nihalchand (I. L. R. 7 Bom. 225), Rajji Vinyakran Jagannath Shankarsett v. Lakshmi Bai (I. L. R. 11 Bom. 381) cited and referred to.

That the case upon which the declaration has been granted not only not being the case made in the plaint, but being one that was wholly inconsistent with it, the declaration ought not to have been granted. Ishan Chunder Singh v. Shama Charan Bhutto and others (11 Moo. I. A. 7) referred to.

Sir Griffith Evans, Dr. Rash Behari Ghose, Babus Jaggut Chunder Banerjee, Sharat Chunder Roy Chaudhuri, Charu Chander Ghose and Indubhusan Majumdar for the Appellants.

Dr. Asutosh Mookerjee, Babus Mahendra Nath Roy and Jogendra Nath Chatterjee for the Respondents.

Appeal allowed: suit dismissed.

REPORTS (See Index.)

THE LAST NUMBER OF THE Harvard Law Review contains many interesting notes of cases. In one case it was held that although testimony as to previous wrongful acts of an accused person is generally inadmissible in evidence, yet it becomes admissible where the question is the intent with which the later acts are committed, and where all the acts form part of a general scheme.

ALTHOUGH WE DO NOT REGARD IT ALWAYS SAFE that a Judge should freely interfere with the discretion of counsel while cross-examining witnesses, still when the privilege is abused it seems but right that the Judge should also exercise some control over cross-examinations assuming inordinate length. In the Golden R. Mining Co. v. Buzton Mining Co. (97 Fed. Report 414) it was held that examination of witnesses must not be protracted beyond reasonable limits even if the questions put be logically relevant. The admissibility of such evidence depends upon the opinion of the trying Judge; and if he is of opinion that a clear inference can be drawn without going into such details as would confuse the jury and unnecessarily protract the case, he may not allow questions on collateral issues to be put.

THE CASE, Fakir Lal Goswami v. W. C. Bonnerji and another, reported in this issue, is worthy of notice. If it had been held, as is suggested at the conclusion of the judgment, that sec. 54(2) of the Bengal Tenancy Act had no application to the circumstances of the case, we would have had no difficulty in accepting the law as laid down. It does not appear from the report that the tenants had asked the landlord to appoint a convenient place. On the contrary it appears that they had for years paid rent at Burdwan and only latterly they offered to pay at Calcutta and on being sued for arrears with interest contended that Burdwan was not a convenient place. Under such circumstances it was quite competent for the Court to say that sec. 54(2) had no application to the present case. And in that view the tenant's offer to pay at Calcutta was not a sufficient tender and he was therefore liable to pay interest on the arrears in suit. But our difficulty in accepting the law as laid down arises in two ways: First, that the finding that Burdwan is not a convenient place is not disturbed and still interest is allowed on rent in arrear. Next, it is said broadly that even if sec. 54 were applicable to the case, the tenants would be under a liability to pay rent at the residence of the landlord even if the latter had no village office or did not appoint a convenient place. But surely, sec. 54 does not contemplate that tenants from the remote corners of these provinces are under any liability of taking or paying rent at Calcutta where many of their landlords reside. A tenant's liability to pay in time seems to be strictly qualified by cl. (2) of sec. 54 and his liability to pay interest under sec. 67 must also be regarded as subject to the same qualification.

THE MILITARY SPIRIT OF THE PRESENT AGE SEEMS to have disturbed also the proverbial equanimity of the English judges. It must, however, be said to the credit of the professional journals that they have not allowed their enthusiasm to get the better of their sense of propriety and have uniformly deprecated the recent exhibitions on the Bench which have gone far to tarnish its fair fame. The Law Journal says:—

'It is regrettable that certain Judges should allow their patriotic feelings to eclipse their judicial dignity. Mr. Justice Grantham interrupted a trial for attempted murder, at the Liverpool Assizes, to announce the relief of Kimberley, and treated the gratifying nature of the intelligence as a sufficient reason for passing a nominal sentence upon a prisoner in another case; while Sir Francis Jeune, in the course of an important trial in the Probate Court on Wednesday, informed the jury that he had received news of the relief of Ladysmith.

These announcements were greeted by the jurymen in both Courts with loud applause, and it is recorded in the Press that 'it was some minutes before the judicial business was proceeded with.' Members of the Bench can easily rejoice in the triumphs of our troops without creating these unseemly exhibitions in Courts of justice. It is certainly no part of their duty to spread the rumours that reach them concerning the progress of the war, while it is of the utmost importance that the attention of juries should not be diverted from the questions which they have to decide. There has lately been a marked increase in the tendency of certain Judges to comment upon matters that lie outside the scope of their judicial duties. It is a tendency which threatens not only the dignity but also the authority of the Bench, for a Judge who concerns himself with questions far removed from his official sphere is apt to impair the confidence of the public in his judgments on those matters with which he has been appointed to deal.

THE Law Times SIMILARLY DENOUNCES THE INCIDENT in which Mr. Justice Grantham surpassed, perhaps, all past record of judicial eccentricity. An account of it is quoted by our contemporary from the Westminster Gazette :—

That Mr. Justice Grantham should publicly announce in court the relief of Kimberley was in the nature of the inevitable, but he did far more than that at the Liverpool Assizes yesterday, when A. was charged with having caused the death of B., his brother-in-law. They quarrelled over Spion Kop, and A. in a fit of anger struck B. with a poker. As a result B. died a week later. A. "expressed great contrition" (as well he might) and pleaded guilty. Whereupon Mr. Justice Grantham said: "The war was an all-absorbing topic, and as very satisfactory news had been received that day as to the relief of Kimberley, he thought justice would be met by giving the prisoner the benefit of the good tidings." The prisoner was thereupon discharged unpunished. It is well indeed that Mr. Justice Grantham is a judge au generis. We cannot help wondering whether the Lord Chancellor would again be prepared to throw his regis over this remarkable verdict?

COURT OF APPEAL.—THE ATTORNEY-GENERAL v. THE BRIGHTON AND HOVE CO-OPERATIVE ASSOCIATION, LD. Before the MASTER OF THE ROLLS, LORDS JUSTICES WILLIAMS and ROMER. 22nd January 1900.

Highway User, causing obstruction—Alleged nuisance—Injunction.

KING v. RUSSELL, (6 East, p. 430) followed.

In this action the Attorney-General acting on the relation of a lodging-house proprietor of Lansdowne Street, West Brighton, had succeeded in securing an injunction from Mr. Justice Kekewich prohibiting the Defendant Association from obstructing that street and the pavement by an unreasonable use thereof. The complaint was that the Defendants so used their several vans daily from early morn to late in the evening as to obstruct that highway causing considerable annoyance and nuisance thereby.

On the Defendants' appeal the Court observed that the learned Judge had decided the case on the evidence before him. It was proved that the Defendants had blocked up a narrow street daily for some distance in loading and unloading their several vans in the carrying on of a large business. This continued throughout the day, in consequence of which persons had avoided the street; that showed an unreasonable obstruction, an appropriation of the highway. The obstruction being proved, prima facie this was a nuisance in law. As to what amounted to a reasonable user it was difficult to draw the line. The question was, what was the consequence of the reasonable exercise of their right conflicting with the right of the public and after referring to the judgment in the above-quoted case with approval and upon a consideration of the facts established by evidence, the Appeal Court held that Defendants' user of the street was unreasonable and dismissed the appeal with costs.

Mr. Warnington, Q. C., and Mr. Beddall for the Appellants.

Mr. MacMoran, Q. C., and Mr. Parkyn for the Respondent was not heard.

Appeal dismissed.

QUEEN'S BENCH DIVISION.—SHUCKBURGH v. LABOUCHERE. Before JUSTICES GRANTHAM and CHANNELL. 15th January 1900.

Pending cause—Newspaper comment—Alleged contempt of Court.

Truth, in an article headed "Shylock in the Pillory" in its issue of 28th December 1899, referring to the Clerical and Medical Advance Bank of Bristol, said: "The latter concern is run by one Edward Shuckburgh who, as is indicated by the name he has chosen, devotes himself specially to fleecing the parsons and doctors; though he does not restrict himself to these classes I regard Shuckburgh as one of the most dangerous and unscrupulous members of his profession."

And referring to a cross-examination of Shuckburgh "in a case last week" it went on to say that the writer (Labouchere) had for the past 9 years used strong language against him, had referred to him as "a rapacious wolf" and "a ravening shark."

Shuckburgh was a money-lender, in fact he was himself the person who carried on the business named as the Bank above stated. The case referred to in Truth was one for trial at the Bristol Assizes wherein Shuckburgh was proceeding against one Roe for obtaining money from him under false pretences. Upon the evidence of Shuckburgh it was said that Roe had been committed for his trial.

The matter now came before the Divisional Court on a motion on behalf of Shuckburgh for a writ of attachment against Mr. Labouchere, the editor of Truth, for a rule nisi, for a writ of attachment, for contempt of Court in commenting on the said cause standing then for trial.

The Court was of opinion that the article did not disclose anything which could prejudice the trial against the Defendant; and although comment on pending cases was to be deprecated and newspaper editors were warned against it, there was nothing in this case which rendered it desirable to grant the rule.

Mr. Lewis Thomas for the Applicant.

C. W. A.

16th January 1900.

Mr. Lewis Thomas, on this date made an ex parte application to the Court of Appeal by way of appeal from the above-mentioned decision of Justices Grantham and Channell on behalf of Mr. Shuckburgh and submitted that the article in question could have been published with no other object than prejudicing the trial.

LORD JUSTICE SMITH (LORD JUSTICES RIGBY and COLLINS concurring) said you may have your rule.

Application granted.

QUEEN'S BENCH DIVISION.—PALMER v. SNOW. Before JUSTICES CHANNELL and BUCKNILL. 29th January 1900.

Meaning of terms.

The charge, laid by the Respondent before the Stipendiary Magistrate of South Staffordshire, was that the Appellant, a hair-dresser, a tradesman of Wolverhampton, had, on Sunday, the 24th September last, shaved and cut the hair of certain persons at his shop which was kept open for the purpose. The information was laid under the provisions of Statute 29, Car. II, c. 7. Sec. 1 prohibits any "tradesman, artificer, workman or labourer or other person whatsoever" from exercising any worldly labour business or his ordinary calling on the Lord's Day, the exceptions being works of necessity or charity.

The Magistrate convicted him as a "tradesman" exercising his "calling" or "business" for profit.

The Divisional Court thought that the word "tradesman" was intended to mean as used in the above Act a person who carried on the business of buying and selling. "Artificer" meant somebody who made something. "Workman or labourer" did not apply to the Appellant because they involved the idea of one who is employed by some one else. The English Act in contrast to the Scotch Act related to certain specified persons the words "or other persons whatsoever" were to be read ejusdem generis with the preceding words and a barber was not a person to whom the Act was intended to apply.

The appeal would therefore be allowed.

DIVORCE COURT.—COOPER KING v. COOPER KING. Before MR. JUSTICE BARNES. 11th January 1900.

Restitution of conjugal rights—Evidence of validity of marriage at Hongkong.

The Respondent was A. D. C. to the Governor of Hongkong. At Hongkong the Petitioner who had been residing there with her parents met him, and they were married at the Registrar-General's Office at Hongkong on the 7th November 1897. There was a mutual understanding that the marriage should not be disclosed. They were both of age when the ceremony took place, and they had never cohabited. He afterwards wrote to say that since the marriage he had made up his mind not to live with her and she was at liberty to make what arrangements she liked.

This was an application on her part for a decree for restitution of conjugal rights.

The Respondent was an Englishman, an officer in this country.

Evidence having been given in support of the facts, the learned Judge desired to have proof of the law of Hongkong regarding the validity of the marriage and the adjudication of the matter stood over for an affidavit from Sir William Robinson who was at the date of the marriage the Governor of the Colony deposing that marriage in question would there be considered a valid marriage. This step was taken on the suggestion of the Petitioner's counsel.

Matter adjourned.

DIVORCE COURT.—ANDREW v. ANDREW AND WILLIAMS alias JOHNSON. Before MR. JUSTICE BARNES. 23rd and 29th January 1900.

Husband and wife—Divorce—Matrimonial Causes Act (20 and 21 Vic., c. 85), sec. 31—Conduct conducing to adultery—Discretionary power to grant divorce.

The Petitioner in this case, seeking a divorce from his wife, held a Commission in the Black Watch. He had married the Respondent professionally known as Maud Richardson. The co-Respondent was the man Williams who was convicted of having stolen the Duchess of Sutherland's jewels. The wife in her turn charged the husband with having deserted her and refused her marital rights and so conducing to her adultery.

The jury found that her adultery was proved, and that the husband's conduct had conduced to her adultery and he had wilfully and without just cause separated himself from her in 1897-98.

Mr. JUSTICE BARNES delivered a considered judgment as to whether on such findings the petition should be dismissed or whether the Court should exercise the discretion under sec. 31 of the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1857. The judgment states that it was intended thereby emphatically to assert that a husband ceased to be entitled to complain of his wife's infidelity if by his own misconduct or neglect he had conducted to it. Baylis v. Baylis (L. R. 1 P. and D. 395) was distinguished. Here, on the applicant the husband's return from South Africa in 1897 he went to Paris until March 1898, and the wife's request to return to her thereafter was not complied with. The adultery proved was committed later than that, therefore there was no reason for exercising his discretion in favour of the husband. The petition would consequently be dismissed with costs.

Mr. Wallace, Q. C., and Mr. Lynch for the Respondent.

CALCUTTA HIGH COURT.

[CRIMINAL REVISIONAL JURISDICTION.]

PRINSEP, J.	} In the matter of the Petition
1900.
21, March.

of AKBAR ALI KHAN
KHAN.

Code of Criminal Procedure (Act V of 1898), secs. 145, 192 (1) and (2), 529 (f)—Order of transfer made by a Magistrate not empowered by law in that behalf, whether void merely on that ground—Order made erroneously and in good faith.

This was an application to set aside an order of the Deputy Magistrate of Hazaribagh, dated the 31st January 1900.

The facts of the case are shortly these:—

On the 24th of November 1899, Mr. Warde-Jones, Deputy Magistrate of Hazaribagh, drew up a proceeding under sec. 145 of the Code of Criminal Procedure calling upon Domi Lal, 1st party, and Akbar Ali Khan and Hossein Khan, 2nd party, to appear before him and to put in written statements of their respective claims regarding the fact of their actual possession to the lands in dispute. On the same day Mr. Warde-Jones passed the following order: "Draw up proceedings against both parties under sec. 145, Cr. P. Code. Referred to S. C. Dass." Written statements were filed by both the parties and Babu Suresh Chandra Dass, Deputy Magistrate, took evidence in the case and on the 31st January 1900 passed an order declaring the 1st party to be in possession of the subject-matter of dispute and forbidding all disturbance of such possession until evicted therefrom in due course of law.

The Petitioners Akbar Ali Khan and Hossein Khan made this application, and it was argued on their behalf that the order should be set aside on the ground that it was made by a Magistrate who had no authority to try the case. It was said that the order under sec. 145 (1) was made by a Magistrate of the first class, not being a District Magistrate, or a Sub-Divisional Magistrate, and he transferred the case to another Magistrate in the same locality, and it was contended that under the terms of sec. 192 (2) this Magistrate, although he may be empowered to transfer cases, was so empowered only to transfer an enquiry or trial relating to an accusation or charge of an offence. It was contended that the proceedings taken under the transfer were null and void.

Queen-Empress v. Chedda and others (1. L. R. 20 All. 40) was referred to.

The Court—

Held.—That under the provisions of sec. 192 (2) the transfer could only have been properly made by an officer, as described in clause (1) of sec. 192 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

That although the order of transfer was made by a Magistrate, not empowered by law in that behalf, erroneously and in good faith, under the terms of sec. 529 (f) the proceedings taken under the transfer were not invalid, merely on the ground of the Magistrate not being so empowered.

Queen-Empress v. Chedda and others (1. L. R. 20 All. 40) distinguished.

Mr. P. L. Roy, with Babu Atulya Charan Bose, for the Petitioners.

Application rejected.

REPORTS (See Index.)

THE HIGH COURT WILL REMAIN CLOSED ON ACCOUNT of Eid and Easter holidays from Monday the 1st of April to Tuesday the 9th of April, both days inclusive.

THE SOCIETY OF COMPARATIVE LEGISLATION is doing signal service in advancing our knowledge of crime and criminals both by publishing valuable notes in its journal and also getting such an eminent lawyer as Mr. Crackanthorpe, K. C., to read a paper on the subject of Comparative Crime and Punishment at its annual meeting. The resume of his lecture we publish in another column.

WE ARE GLAD TO FIND IT ANNOUNCED IN THE newspaper press that Mr. B. L. Gupta and not Mr. Staley is to officiate in the High Court Bench during the absence of Mr. Justice Prinsep on furlough. The office of the Legal Remembrancer to the Government of Bengal is a very responsible one, and we feel sure that Mr. Staley will fill it with great credit.

WE ARE NOT ALARMED AT THE SIGHT OF THE voluminous report of crimes committed in these provinces during 1899-1900, for in reality it shows a downward tendency, specially taking into consideration the last three years' figures. It is curious that this decline is represented by a steady decrease of nine to ten thousand cases in each of these years. As for previous years it is difficult to arrive at any conclusion as the mode of computation is made to vary from time to time. But taking the average annual return of crimes of all kinds at 300,000 and the population at 75,000,000 we get four offences in the year in a community of 1,000. Then, when we have regard to the fact that such offences are more collective than individual in their character, and relate mostly to possession of diluviated land or to the gathering of crops in such disputed lands, we feel no hesitation in saying that people of these provinces are as law-abiding as any in the world. The Government ought not to make much of the number of paddy-cutting cases arising out of disputed possession of land but would do better if it occupied itself to the repression of robbery and other violent offences against person and property which, it is alleged, are being committed by persons from beyond the North-Western frontier.

WE HAVE OFTEN POINTED OUT IN THESE COLUMNS that ideas as regard the objects of the criminal law have undergone a fundamental change in the course of the last century. Criminal law is no longer regarded as meant for hunting down criminals but merely as a means to keep them in check with a view to mend and not end them. We have not unfrequently congratulated ourselves on the low list of cases in the Calcutta Court of Sessions but we wish we could do the same as regards the sentences sometimes passed on the ground of previous convictions for petty thefts. Transportation for life, the sentence passed in one such case, and four years' hard labour relieved by thirty stripes and a further term of solitary confinement in another for the theft of Rs. 2-8 on the ground of previous convictions, were sentences which made a juryman come out of Court and enquire of the first robed gentleman he met, if there was no appeal against such sentences. Since both public opinion and the opinion of the judges vary greatly in the matter of sentences and personal equations play a great part either in the direction of severity or leniency, we are sure that the report of an international commission on the lines proposed by Mr. Crackanthorpe will throw considerable light on the subject and may eventually go to eliminate personal factors.

CRIME AND PUNISHMENT FROM THE COMPARATIVE POINT OF VIEW.

The Lord Chief Justice presided over the annual meeting of the Society of Comparative Legislation held in the Old Hall, Lincoln's Inn, on Wednesday afternoon.

Mr. Crackanthorpe, K.C., read a paper on 'Crime and Punishment from the Comparative Point of View,' in which after referring to Dr. Anderson's recent article which describes our system of punishment as 'absurd and mischievous, neither science nor common-sense being allowed a hearing,' he observed that, though this statement might be exaggerated, it was well to have our comfortable optimism disturbed if our methods were to be improved. Modern penal law he defined as 'a weapon of social defence tempered by justice to the individual.' Sir James Stephen and Beccaria had shown that crime was in former times viewed objectively only, and without regard to the offender's character. On this principle the French code of 1810 treated the criminal as an abstraction, and the legal limits of punishment for specified crimes were laid down with mathematical precision. The rigour of the code was, however, modified by the admission of 'extenuating circumstances.' The Belgian code of 1867 discarded the theories of Beccaria and accepted those of Pellegrino Rossi, who laid great stress on the reclamation of the criminal. The new school of criminologists treated the criminal as the complex product of inherited propensities and the atmosphere in which he had been brought up. Its advocates were—in France, MM. Tarde and Lacaze; in Belgium, M. Prinz; in Russia, M. Fornitzki. In Italy the subjectivity of the criminal had been pushed to its extreme by Lombroso and Garofalo, the former laying principal stress on physiological peculiarities, the latter on the influence of the social factors of life. In Germany the connection between crime and its causes formed a separate department of study under the name of die Kriminalpolitik, of which Professor Franz von Litz, of the University of Berlin, was a powerful exponent. The first State reformatory for youthful offenders originated in the United States in 1825. Another attempt was made at the French agricultural colony of Mettray, founded in 1829 by M. De Metz and the Vicomte de Courteilles, of which a special feature was the maison paternelle, where sons of well-to-do parents who had proved unmanageable at home and were between the ages of sixteen and twenty-one could, by virtue of a provision of the French Civil Code, be sent to undergo for a period of six months a course of curative moral treatment and instruction at their parent's expense. Again the principle of our First Offenders Act, 1867, was first resorted to in Massachusetts, where the juvenile, after being convicted and admonished, was placed in charge of a probation officer, whose duty it was to watch over his conduct, and if it were unsatisfactory to report to the Court. In France the loi Bérenger of 1891 had been borrowed from our Act of 1887; but under the French law a defined sentence was pronounced, so that the first offender knew precisely what his punishment would be if he got into trouble again. Dealing next with the professional criminal, Mr. Crackanthorpe stated that every European code, except the Spanish, treated the récidiviste more severely than the first offender, the French law on this subject being more elaborate than the German, and the Italian more elaborate than the French. Among our own judges there were wide differences of opinion and practice. The question might well be threshed out by means of an international congress, with hope of a like fruitful result as had followed the International Penitentiary Congresses which had been held in most of the capitals of Europe. The first of these was held in London in 1872, and as a consequence of these congresses improvements had been made in almost every country in Europe. It was for this reason he had proposed at the Congress of Comparative Legislation held in Paris last autumn that an international commission should be appointed for the purposes explained in a letter in the Times of August 17 last. This commission would possess one novel feature of supreme importance, in that it would bring an expert on prison discipline into close personal contact with experts on the theories of sentencing. These two subjects had been too long kept apart. Judges should not only ponder carefully over their sentences, but should also know precisely the nature of the punishment inflicted. He agreed with Dr. Anderson and with Mr. Justice Wills, in his letter recently published in the Times, that the uniform severity of penal servitude was a serious obstacle to the elimination of professional criminals, and that our existing methods of punishment were too monotonous and inelastic. The new commission might make some valuable suggestions on this head, and he (or his successor) might at no distant date be able to present to the society a body of carefully sifted opinion, capable of being translated into rules for practical guidance.—The Law Journal.

CRIMINAL CASES OF 1900.

III.—EVIDENCE AND OATHS ACTS.

A conspiracy within the terms of sec. 10 contemplates more than a joint action of two or more to commit an offence:—Nogendrabala v. Empress, 4 C. W. N. 528.

Statements to a police-officer recorded as under sec. 161 by a person against whom there was evidence in the hands of the Police on which he was bound to arrest are inadmissible under sec. 25:—Queen-Empress v. Jadab Dass, 4 C. W. N. 129; 27 Cal. 295. The words "take into consideration" in sec. 30 do not mean that the confession referred to is to have the force of sworn evidence:—Queen-Empress v. Nirmal Das, 22 All. 445. If a co-accused pleads guilty, he may be immediately convicted and sentenced, and his trial is then over. A confession by such person is not admissible under sec. 30, but he ought to be taken from the dock and examined as a witness:—Queen-Empress v. Chinna, 23 Mad. 151. If the plea is not accepted by the Court, and it nevertheless proceeds to try him, his confession is admissible:—Queen-Empress v. Chinna, following Confirmation case noted in Empress v. Pakaji, 19 Bom. 195. If after the plea, which the Court has accepted, he is still kept in the dock unconvicted, his confession is inadmissible:—Empress v. Lakshmayya, 22 Mad. 491:—Empress v. Pakaji.

Sec. 41 provides that the finding of a Civil Court is conclusive, and it is not open to a Criminal Court to find that the Will was a forgery. The finding of a Criminal Court is not binding on a Civil Court:—Mangunali v. Empress, 4 C. W. N. clxxvi.

The character of the accused not being a fact in issue in an offence under sec. 401, I. P. C., evidence of bad character or reputation is inadmissible:—Mankuri Pussu v. Queen-Empress, 27 Cal. 839.

The Judge misdirects the jury when he tells them that under sec. 103 the onus is on the accused to show that the deed is genuine:—Sadhu Sheik v. Empress, 4 C. W. N. 576, following Empress v. Dhunno Kazi, 8 Cal. 121.

A bare finding of stolen property in the house of a joint Hindu family is not, under sec. 114, evidence of possession on the part of each of its members:—Queen-Empress v. Nirmal Das, 22 All. 445.

Mere presence of a person on the occasion of giving a bribe, and his omission to promptly inform the authorities, do not constitute him an accomplice; unless he has co-operated or was instrumental in the payment:—Queen-Empress v. Deodhar Singh, 27 Cal. 144. See on the point, 24 W. R. 55; 14 Bom. 115, 331; 17 Cal. 642; 21 Cal. 328; 2 C. W. N. 55, 672; 23 Cal. 361.

The rule as to the necessity of corroboration of an accomplice is also laid down in the case. In 21 Cal. 328 an informer was held not to be an accomplice, but his testimony nevertheless required corroboration. So also in 23 Cal. 86, certain persons were held to be no better than accomplices.

Sec. 167 applies to the High Court exercising powers under cl. 26 of the Letters Patent:—Empress v. McGuire, 4 C. W. N. 433; R v. Nawaji, 9 Bom. H. C. R. 358; R v. Huribole, 1 Cal. 207; Empress v. Pitamber, 2 Bom. 61; Queen-Empress v. O'Hara, 17 Cal. 642.

A person who is immediately after an acquittal examined to enable the Magistrate to act under sec. 190 (c), Cr. P. C., against other persons is not a witness under sec. 5 of the Oaths Act, and no oath can be administered to him:—Hari Charan v. Queen-Empress, 4 C. W. N. 249; 27 Cal. 455.

COURT OF APPEAL.—SUN INSURANCE COMPANY, LIMITED AND OTHERS v. CARR. Before THE LORD CHANCELLOR, THE MASTER OF THE ROLLS, and LORD JUSTICE COLLINS. 1st November 1900.

Commercial Court—Transfer of cause—Right of appeal, sec. 19, Judicature Act, 1873—Question of International Law.

BARRY v. PERUVIAN CORPORATION, (1896, 1 Q. B. 208) approved of.

This was one of the actions arising out of the seizure of arms in the Persian Gulf in January 1898 by the Defendant Commander Carr of H. M. S. Lapwing. The Defendant had sought to justify the seizure under a proclamation of the Sultan of Muscat. The cause of Francis Times & Co. against him is still pending on appeal, on his part, to the House of Lords. The Plaintiffs in this action had failed in the action brought against them by Francis Times & Co. under a policy of Marine Assurance. In that action Francis Times & Co. had succeeded in recovering judgment for a total loss owing to the confiscation of other portions of the arms by Commander Carr.

The action now brought was in consequence of the Plaintiffs, the Sun Insurance Company, failing in that action. They now sought to make the Defendant Carr liable to them for the amount so paid by them to Francis Times & Co. On their application Mr. Justice Mathew ordered the action to be transferred to the Commercial Court for adjudication.

On the arguments before the Court of Appeal, the appeal having been preferred on behalf of the Defendant, it was held, following the above quoted decision, that an appeal did lie and that the dispute between the parties raised serious questions of international law; therefore the transfer was not properly made.

The Attorney-General and Mr. Ackland for the Commander.

Mr. Joseph Walton, Q. C., and Mr. Hollams for the Plaintiff Company.

Appeal allowed.

COURT OF APPEAL.—THE LONDON GENERAL OMNIBUS COMPANY v. LOVELL. Before the LORD CHIEF JUSTICE and JUSTICES RIGBY and WILLIAMS. 19th November 1900.

Judge viewing the thing in dispute and using impression derived in place of evidence.

This was an action by the Company to restrain the Defendant Lovell from running an omnibus so painted and lettered as to closely resemble the Plaintiff's omnibuses running ever the same course. No evidence was brought forward to prove that any one was deceived or misled by such resemblance into using the Defendant's vehicle as that of Plaintiff. Mr Justice Farwell had by consent of parties viewed the omnibus and had come to the conclusion that the Defendant's omnibus had been so got up as to deceive the public using the cars and therefore granted to Plaintiff the injunction they sought.

On Defendant's appeal, the Court of Appeal reversed that order. It was quite true that the Judge had power to inspect the thing concerning which the question was debated before him (Order 50, Rule 4) but a Judge had no right to place his impression derived from a view in the place of evidence. There may be cases of such common knowledge, so well known to the tribunal as no evidence would be necessary. The present case was not of that character, some evidence was necessary to justify the Court in coming to the conclusion beyond the mere view.

Mr. Davis, Q. C., and Mr. Boome for the Defendant.

Mr. Hughes, Q. C., and Mr. Wilkinson for the Company.

Appeal allowed.

COURT OF APPEAL.—MONTI v. BARNES. Before THE MASTER OF THE ROLLS, LORDS JUSTICES COLLINS, and STIRLING. 27th November 1900.

Furniture passing to mortgagee as fixtures.

The claim was to recover certain fitments, fixtures, and effects of their value £287 and damages for their detention. The question arose between the mortgagor and mortgagee as to who was entitled to those articles in the mortgaged premises.

The Plaintiff purchased the mortgagor's equity of redemption in July 1893. The Defendant took a transfer of the original mortgagee's security in August 1890. In March 1898 the Defendant became owner in fee of the premises by foreclosure of mortgage.

Between the date of mortgage and its transfer to Defendant, the original mortgagor had caused considerable decorative improvements to be made to the house. The subject-matters of the present litigation were at that time added to the house. The most important item in dispute was called a "fitment" it was the necessary and usual dressing-room furniture and a mirror in the drawing-room. The dressing-room articles were specially made for the room, they were in several parts fastened together with nails and screws. The whole of them were fastened on to the walls of the rooms by battens, these again were nailed on to the walls and the fitment screwed on to them. The backs of the furniture were made up of the walls they were attached to; they had no backs of their own. The mirror was similarly fixed in, and covered up a large window. The Defendant counter-claimed for certain dog grates which were put in by the original mortgagor in the place of and as substitutes for the grates that were there fixed in when he became owner. Mr. Justice Bigham had by consent of parties sent in an expert to the premises to examine and report to him how these articles were fixed to the walls. Upon consideration of such report the learned Judge had held that the articles formed part of the premises and as such passed to the mortgagee, including the dog grates which stood in the place of the old fixed grates and so decided for Defendant.

On this appeal of the Plaintiff such decision was upheld. The Court came to the conclusion that there was evidence on which Mr. Justice Bigham could properly come to the conclusion he had arrived at. As regards the dog grates, in accepting the decision of the learned Judge, they refer to Holland v. Hodgson (1. L. R. 7 C. P., see p. 331).

Mr. H. Ried, Q. C., and Mr. Canutt in support of the Appeal.

Mr. Rufus Isaacs and Mr. McCarthy were not called on for the Respondent.

C. W. A.

Appeal dismissed with costs.

COURT OF APPEAL.—RERCE v. HOWARD. Before THE MASTER OF THE ROLLS, LORDS JUSTICES COLLINS and ROMER. 6th March 1901.

Contract—Inadequate award of damages by jury—Breach of warranty—New trial.

In this case, Plaintiff who sought a new trial had bought a horse for £140 from the Defendant who had given a warranty that the horse was fit to go in single harness and a quiet animal.

The action was for recovery of the amount paid for the horse and expenses incurred, as the horse had turned out not fit for the purpose for which it was bought. The jury found that the warranty had been broken and gave £5 damages as a compromise verdict.

For the Defendant against the giving of a new trial, it was contended that the jury had every item before them and it was for them to decide on the amount of damages.

THE MASTER OF THE ROLLS.—"If I buy a horse for my wife to drive in, and the animal turns out no good for that very purpose that I bought him for, is not that the basis of the measure of damages I am entitled to, and not merely for the breach of warranty that the horse was quiet in single harness."

There was no reasonable ground on which the verdict of the jury could be supported, the jury had not been properly directed. The Plaintiff must be allowed a new trial.

Mr. Marshall Hall, K. C., and Mr. C. E. Jones for the Plaintiff.

Mr. Witt, K. C., and Sir John Paget for the Horse-dealer.

Application granted.

Notes of Cases.

PRIVY COUNCIL.

APPEAL FROM THE COURT OF THE JUDICIAL COMMISSIONER OF OUDH.

LORD HOBHOUSE.	} LAL JUGDISH BAHADUR, Plaintiff, Appellant, v. LAL SHEO PARTAB SINGH, Defendant, Respondent.
LORD DAVEY.
LORD LINDLEY.
SIR R. COUCH.
1901.
15, February.

Hindu Law—Inheritance—Impartible estate—Younger son by first wife—Elder son by later wife.

Both Courts, that of the District Judge of Rai Bareilly and the Judicial Commissioners of Oudh, had dismissed Plaintiff's suit with costs. Hence this appeal to His Majesty in Council.

The suit was brought to recover possession of the entire Pawansi estate situated in the Partabghur, District of Oudh. By the ruling of the Judicial Committee in Rani Janki Koer's case, it was decided (see L. R. 5 I. A., p. 1) that the estate created by sanad had vested in Thakurani Koblas Kunwar, the widow of Mahpal Singh, and on death of Koblas Kunwar to have descended to her daughter Rani Janki Kunwar under cl. xi, sec. 22, Act I of 1869. Koblas Koer's name was entered in lists I and II mentioned in sec. 8 of that Statute.

Rani Janki Kunwar died childless in December 1888, and the claimants to the estate were the present Appellant's great-grandfather Sitla Baksh who was the Plaintiff in the suit out of which this appeal has arisen and his elder brother the Respondent Shankar Baksh was the Defendant.

The Plaintiff and the Defendant were the sons of one Raghunath who was a distant cousin of Mahpal Singh, the father of Rani Janki Kunwar. Sitla Baksh was born of the first wife of Raghunath, while the Respondent, though born first, was born of the junior wife of Raghunath.

The Revenue authorities having recognized the claim of the Respondent, the first born son, the Appellant's great-grandfather Sitla Baksh had to establish his title which he sought to do by his present suit.

Upon the question which son should succeed according to Hindu law the Judicial Commissioner referred to the judgment of the Judicial Committee in Padda Ramappa Nayaniwaru v. Bangari Seshamma Nayaniwaru (L. R. 8 I. A., p. 1). In that case the same question which is now being considered was brought before the Lords of the Judicial Committee, who, referring to 122 Verse of Chap. 9 of Manu, gave their opinion, that if the text of Manu were read without the admittedly interpolated words "but of a lower class," Verses 122, 123 and 124 would undoubtedly give some support to the contention that the younger son of the first married wife was to be preferred to his elder brother, born of a later married wife. The interpolation having been then believed to be the work of so distinguished a commentator as Kalluka Bhatta, the Lords of the Judicial Committee were of opinion that it could not be disregarded, but that effect must be given to it; and they held that it limited the effect of Verses 122, 123 and 124 to the case of the later married wife being of a lower class, and that between sons of wives of the same class, no preference was to be given to the son of the earlier married wife by reason of such priority of marriage.

He held that the principle laid down in such case was binding upon him, though in the case before him it was admitted, and was accepted by him, that Sir William Jones was wrong in attributing the interpolation to Kalluka Bhatta, it being in fact the work of a commentator named Prakash. He then examined certain later commentators on this passage, and concluded this part of his judgment as follows:—

"As the correct translation of Verse 123 is doubtful, and as Manu's own answer to the question propounded by him in Verse 123 cannot be clearly ascertained, it appears to me that the Appellant has failed to establish satisfactorily his contention by the texts quoted by him.

"I find, therefore, that by Hindu law, Sitla Baksh did not by virtue of being born of the first married wife, acquire seniority over his elder brother Shankar Baksh, the first-born son of his father, and that accordingly he was not under that law entitled to succeed to the impartible Pawansi estate in preference to his elder brother, the first born son."

As regards Plaintiff's claim to non-talukdari property the judgment states that these were not claimed as distinct from the talukdari property, or on any grounds other than those advanced in support of the claim to the taluka, and there was no evidence produced to show that such property followed a line of devolution distinct from the taluka, therefore he concurred with the lower Court that Plaintiff had made out no claim to such property.

Both Courts also found that the custom of succession alleged by Plaintiff had not been established.

Mr. Branson for Appellant contended that it being now admitted that the interpolated words in Sir William Jones's translation of Verse 122 of Chap. 9 of the Institutes of Manu are not supported by the authority of Kalluka Bhatta, the judgment in the case relied on by the Judicial Commissioners, which was based on the supposition that such gloss was the work of Kalluka Bhatta, was no longer to be considered as a binding authority.

Mr. Branson referred to Sarvadhikary Tagore Law Lectures, 1880, p. 221.

Mr. Branson also contended that it lay on the Defendant to prove that by custom the non-talukdari property was impartible and went with the taluka as such, as he did not do so such property was divisible.

LORD HOBHOUSE.—It is for you to show that the family custom does not apply to non-talukdari property.

Mr. Branson referred to 5 Mad. High Court Reports, p. 31, see p. 39; I. L. R. 17 Mad. 422, see p. 444.

Reference was also made to the case of Dewan Ramhya Bahadur (L. R. 17 I. A., p. 173).

Mr. Mayne and Mr. Cowell appeared for the Respondent and were heard only as regards the non-talukdari property.

Mr. Mayne.—That is a question of pleading, he should have raised that point in the first Court: see the case of Sudaralingasawami (L. R. 26 I. A., p. 55, end of p. 57).

This was an appeal against a decision of the Calcutta High Court which in part reversed the decision of the Sub-Judge of Rungpore.

The suit was brought by the Appellant to enforce a mortgage executed by the executors of the late Mohesh Chunder Roy Chowdhury as regards his estate and by his widow Jagadishwari and his daughter Bhuban Mohini as regards separate properties granted to them by Mohesh Chunder. The original Court decreed in favour of Plaintiff as regards all the properties.

On appeal the High Court decided that Bhuban Mohini, a purdanashin, was not bound by the mortgage. They say in their judgment, "conceding that the deed was read over to her quickly, and we think that this was all that was done at the time of the execution, this falls far short of the explanation which is required in such cases, and we think it would be difficult for any one, much less an illiterate purdanashin lady to understand the full purport and effect of a deed of this description from hearing it rapidly read over, and from the mere fact of its being read over, it cannot be inferred that she understood it or knew that she was mortgaging her own property. It was not a simple mortgage by a person mortgaging her own property. It was a mortgage by persons purporting to act in different capacities and mortgaging different descriptions of properties. Possibly it may have been a very good and effective mortgage, so far as the executors were concerned; but Bhuban Mohini had nothing to do with the executorship or with the properties mortgaged by the executors. It would not have been difficult to persuade her that her signature was necessary or desirable to a deed which was being executed by her mother and husband, without any knowledge on her part that she was mortgaging her own property, or admitting a liability for debts for which they were alone liable. It is, we think, a case in which there should have been clear evidence of an explanation of the deed to Bhuban Mohini, in so far as it effected her interests as distinct from the interest of the other executants. There is really no evidence worth alluding to of any explanation to her, much less an explanation of that description, and we are very far from satisfied that she understood that she was mortgaging her property."

The deed on which the suit was brought was a consolidation of two previous deeds; the consideration for it is thus stated therein:—

The amount due on the ex parte decree obtained by the Plaintiff on the strength of a mortgage bond for Rs. 8,000 executed by Jagadishwari and Sudarsan as executors under the Will of Mohesh Chunder Roy Chowdhury and also as guardian of the minor Kali Ranjan, and by Bhuban Mohini, Jagadishwari and Sudarsan themselves, on 3rd Assin 1294, vide Exs. Mr. Asquith, K. C., Sir William Rattigan, K. C., and Mr. Mayne for the Appellant.

The Respondent was not represented.

LORD HOBHOUSE to Mr. Asquith.—You have to show that the deed was explained to this purdanashin lady. You admit that the onus lies on you.

Mr. Asquith.—Yes. The various deeds and the evidence was read and commented on.

LORD DAVEY.—It does not appear to have been explained to her that it did bind her private property.

Sir William Rattigan followed Mr. Asquith arguing that although the Respondent was a purdanashin she could not be considered a secluded woman, she understood business, managed her property, was familiar with zemindari work and had executed other deeds. He referred to the following decisions and commented on them:—

Khatjia v. Ismail, (I. L. R. 12 Mad. 380 at 384); Dado Bibi v. Sami Pillai (I. L. R. 18 Mad. 257); Syud Fuzul Hossein v. Anjud Ali (19 W. R., p. 523); Asghar Ali v. Delroos Bunno Begum (I. L. SALE, J. }

This was an application by one of the daughters of the deceased for a grant of letters of administration to the estate and effects of the deceased. The deceased who was a Parsee died at Nausari in the territories of the Gaekwar of Baroda on the 9th of August 1900, leaving properties in British India, a portion of such properties being in the town of Calcutta. He died leaving him surviving a widow and two daughters by a predeceased wife. Both the daughters were married, the Petitioner residing with her husband at Calcutta and the other daughter residing with her husband at Mombassa in Africa. The deceased executed his last Will and Testament prior to his second marriage, and after his death his widow impeached the validity of the Will on the ground that the same was revoked by the subsequent marriage of the deceased. On the 24th November 1900 the widow for a consideration mentioned therein executed a release in favour of the applicant and her sister of all her right, title, share, inheritance and interest which she had against the estate and effects of the deceased and thereby renounced her right to administer the said estate. She also renounced her right to letters of administration by signing her consent at the foot of the applicant's petition.

Mr. Sinha for the applicant submitted that letters of administration could be granted to the Petitioner without issuing any citations. The Court at all times prefers a sole administration to a joint administration and acting upon this rule it grants administration priori petenti, i.e., to that next-of-kin or to that residuary legatee (where there are several) who first applies. See Tristram and Coote's Probate Practice, p. 209; Cordeux v. Trisler (4 Sw. & Tr. 51). The consent or renunciation of the other next-of-kin is not required, the superior diligence of the first applicant superseding all other claims. The other daughter resides out of the jurisdiction and cannot act without the prior consent of her husband. The delay in obtaining her consent or renunciation may cause damage to the estate. Besides, the present grant would not be irrevocable.

The Will became inoperative by the subsequent marriage, and letters of administration should be granted without issuing any citation on the executor named in the Will. See In the goods of Elizabeth Graham (L. R. 2 P. & D. 385).

SALE, J.—I think, following the English practice as shown in those cases, the order for letters of administration can go without issuing any citation.

SUIT No. 4 OF 1901.

v.
MUSSAMUT BRIJCOOMARY.

Application for letters of administration during the pendency of an application for probate—Application for allowing photograph of the Will to be taken.

One Luchmee Narain Bagla died some time in March this year. After his death an application was made some days ago before the Hon'ble Mr. Justice Stanley on behalf of one Ramrick Dass, the sole executor named in the Will of the deceased, for grant of probate of the same. By the Will the deceased bequeathed a lakh of rupees for building and upkeep of a house to be called "bhai brotherki mokam" or a house to be used as the meeting place of Marwari gentlemen in connection with the subjects which affect them and a lakh of rupees for housing and providing for the maintenance of Brahmins and 2 lakhs and a half for building a school in his native village Chooroo in Bikanir and for maintaining the same in an efficient condition besides various other legacies. On that application, it having been pointed out to the Court that the widow of Bhagwan Dass Bagla, deceased, (whose adopted son the deceased was) had entered a caveat, His Lordship directed the Will to be proved in solemn form.

Then grounds were filed by the caveatrix contesting the Will on the ground of forgery, want of authority and so on.

The caveatrix now applied on notice to the other party that letters of administration may be granted to her as in a case of intestacy.

Mr. W. C. Bonnerjee for the Applicant.

The Advocate-General (The Hon'ble Mr. J. T. Woodroffe) and Messrs. Jackson, O'Kinealy and Garth opposed the application.

His Lordship directed that the application should be taken into consideration after the application for probate is disposed of, the day for which was with the consent of both the parties fixed for the 16th proximo.

Mr. W. C. Bonnerjee then applied that his client might be permitted to have the Will photographed, so that the persons well acquainted with the signature of the deceased who could not be brought to Court might see the same and say whether the signature was genuine or not. He further submitted that this was very often done in England and was done in the case of her client's husband's Will as well as in the Tarkeswar Mohun's case.

The Advocate-General said that he was not aware of any such practice in England and, so far as he was aware, no photograph was taken in the Tarkeswar case and about his client's late father's Will it was done with the consent of the parties. Here he opposed the application as he thought that this course might lead to help the caveatrix to procure false evidence.

Ordered—That the applicant may be at liberty to have the Will photographed at such place and upon such notice and generally upon such terms as the Registrar might think best.

Evidence Act (I of 1872), sec. 32, cl. 5—Horoscope, admissibility of—Statement as to age by a deceased relative.

The question raised in this case was whether the Defendant was a minor at the date of the transaction in suit. In the course of the evidence for the Defendant, it was proved that at his annaprasan ceremony, the family astrologer, who was present, wrote out his astral name in the horoscope prepared by him, that the horoscope was thereupon made over to the father of the Defendant, who took it into the inner apartments and made it over to the mother saying "this is the horoscope of our son." It was further proved that on a subsequent occasion, when the Defendant was ill, the father took out the horoscope and consulted it. The astrologer who drew up the horoscope was, however, not called.

Mr. Mitra ( Mr. Chakravarti with him ) for the Defendant tendered the horoscope.

Mr. O'Kinenly ( Mr. A. Chaudhuri with him ) for the Plaintiff objected to the horoscope being admitted in evidence and referred to Satis Chunder Mukhopadhyaya v. Mahendra Lal Patuk (I. L. R. 17 Cal. 849.)

The Court admitted the horoscope, not qua horoscope, but as a statement, under sec. 32, cl. 5, either of the family astrologer or a statement adopted by the father.

APPEAL FROM ORDER
No. 220 of 1900.

Civil Procedure Code Act (XIX of 1882), sec. 583

—Assignment of decree—Appeal—Execution of decree—Assignee not made party to appeal—Remand—Suit, dismissal of—Refund of decretal amount by assignee.

This was an appeal preferred on the 18th of June 1900 from an order of Babu Nepal Chunder Bose, Sub-Judge of Ranchi, dated the 7th April 1900, reversing an order of Babu Rajani Kant Mukerjee, Munsif of Hazaribagh, dated the 5th of December 1899.

One Luchman Ram obtained a decree for money against the father of Rajah Ram Narain Singh on the 19th of January 1897. On the 20th of January 1897 the interest of Luchman Ram in the decree was transferred by him to one Frizoni, the present Appellant. The Defendant preferred an appeal against Luchman Ram but did not make Frizoni a Respondent. On the 8th March 1897 Frizoni, as the assignee of the decree, applied for execution. The judgment-debtor objected to this and prayed for stay of execution; this prayer was refused and the judgment-debtor was referred to the Appellate Court. Execution was allowed to proceed and the judgment-debtor paid into Court the money covered by the decree on the 30th June 1897, and Frizoni withdrew the amount. On the 10th February 1898 the Appellate Court reversed the decree of the 1st Court and remanded the case, and on the 6th June 1898 the suit was dismissed. Notwithstanding the order of the execution Court stated above, the judgment-debtor made no application to the Appellate Court for stay of execution nor did he ask that Frizoni be added as a party Respondent to the appeal; the decree of the Appellate Court remanding the case for retrial was made in the absence of Frizoni, and the decree of the 1st Court after remand dismissing the suit was also made in his absence. The present application was then made by Rajah Ram Narain Singh under sec. 583, C. P. C., for execution of the decree of the Appellate Court, by which the decree of the 19th January 1897 was set aside and for getting back the money which Frizoni had withdrawn from Court. The Munsif rejected the application, and the Subordinate Judge, on appeal, reversed the order of the Munsif, and made an order directing Frizoni to pay the amount to Rajah Ram Narain Sing. From this order the present appeal was preferred.

Held—That sec. 583, C. P. C., can only apply to the parties to the appeal.

That the decree of the Appellate Court could not be executed against Frizoni, he being no party to the decree and not having derived any interest from the Plaintiff in the suit subsequent to such decree.

Babu Joges Chandra De for the Appellant.

Babus Karuna Sindhu Mookerjee and Surendra Nath Ghosal for the Respondent.

REPORTS (See Index.)

THE SOCIETY OF COMPARATIVE LEGISLATION, AMONG other valuable notes, in its journal publishes the following results as marking the progress in penology in the century which has just closed:—

- (1) The higher standard of prison construction and administration;
- (2) The improved personnel in prison management;
- (3) The recognition of labour as a disciplinary and reformatory agent;
- (4) The substitution of productive for unproductive labour and to a small degree required for unrequited labour;
- (5) An improvement in prison dietaries;
- (6) New and better principles of classification;
- (7) The substitution of a reformatory for a retributory system;
- (8) Probation, or conditional release for first offenders, with friendly surveillance;
- (9) The parole system of conditional liberation, found in its best form in the indeterminate sentence as an adjunct of a reformatory system and as a means for the protection of society;
- (10) The Bertillon system for the identification of prisoners;
- (11) The new attention given to the study of the criminal, his environment and history;
- (12) The separation of accidental from habitual criminals;
- (13) The abandonment of transportation;
- (14) The humane treatment of the criminal insane, the improvement in criminal procedure, more effective organisation

tion in relief and protective work and in the study of penological problems; and

- (15) The new emphasis laid upon preventive, instead of punitive or merely corrective, measures.

AMERICA TO WHICH THE WORLD IS INDEBTED FOR THE First Offenders Act and for other progressive ideas in the treatment of criminals, promises to further advance our knowledge of the prison population. We find from the pages of the same journal that the committee of the National Prison Association, United States, have recommended the establishment of prison laboratories and the employment of specialists for the scientific study of the prison population with reference to the practical needs of discipline, instruction and training of prisoners. The subject of research in such laboratories will be—

“Psychical: the mental, emotional, voluntary life-activities; measurements of sensation and other manifestations of mind through the body; and the hereditary factors. The tastes, ideas, knowledge, motives. Social: the domestic industrial neighbourhood, legal, political, and religious environment which have influenced the character and conduct. All these factors enter into every life and help to shape it, and no one of them taken alone is sufficient for an explanation.”

The committee state the utility of such a prison laboratory as

“It is useful for discipline: for the direction of aid to discharged prisoners; for the enlightenment of Legislatures, Courts, and authorities in Criminal Law and procedure. It promises to make important contributions to the various sciences of human life: to anatomy, physiology, anthropology, psychology, sociology. The prisons would thus be brought into contact with the great life of universities, and would assist millions of convicts throughout the world.”

It is little to be wondered that the American people, who have hitherto cared little for the vain-glory of war and conquest, should occupy themselves with questions that many a government at the present day have neither time or money, nor inclination, perhaps, to study. But it certainly strikes us as somewhat strange that even the Russian bureaucracy should feel any inclination and have money also to spare for reforms in its penal system. We are indebted to the Society's journal for the following notice of the recent abolition of transportation in Russia:—

"The close of the century is signalised by a notable step taken by Russia abolishing deportation as a part of her penal system, with the exception of a small penal colony for political and habitual offenders. This is a step long contemplated by Russia, and now determined upon after the most positive evidence of the evils of deportation to Siberia. Russia is about to make provision in prisons for fourteen thousand more prisoners; and she has appropriated 3,520,000 dollars for the new buildings, which must be erected for the eight thousand who cannot be accommodated in existing prisons. This new step by Russia marks the practical abandonment of transportation by all civilised countries, with the exception of France, which still supports penal colonies; but the latter are secondary features of the French system."

IT IS MUCH TO BE REGRETTED THAT INSTEAD OF progressing with the times we are sometimes retrogressive in our legislation. The new Code of Criminal Procedure furnishes many an example in this direction. It is, however, rather strange, as Sir Raymond West remarks, in his contribution in the society's journal relating to the recent changes in Egypt, that the system of police surveillance, after it had got discredited in Egypt, should find place in the new Code of Criminal Procedure. Such powers to the police, says this eminent ex-judge of the Bombay High Court, gives them opportunity to blackmail and oppress the people. The mischief is, perhaps, aggravated by the resolution of the Bengal Government issued after the new Code came into operation, directing the police to exercise such supervision over prisoners even after their release. Such provisions of law make the taint of crime stick to a released prisoner and is an undoubted obstacle to his chances of reclamation or of his ever being able to earn an honest livelihood. We are at one with Sir Raymond West that such supervision should be limited to cases of reconviction and there too, opportunities should be given for finding sureties for good behaviour. The Government of India which has police-reform in view ought to take note of the following observations of Sir Raymond West on police supervision.

This is a matter that calls for the most careful treatment. The nightly roll-call of bad characters in Indian villages has been the means of preventing thousands of dacoities; and brigandage on the Egyptian scale of a few years ago called for a preventive measure of a similar kind. Police supervision, on the other hand, too often amongst Orientals, means police tyranny and blackmail. Few persons, except those who have had actual experience, realise the extremely debilitating effect of long confinement in gaol. It seems to produce an almost total atrophy of the organs of forethought, initiative, and persistence. Hence those who have served a long term, unless taken care of by friends, almost inevitably gravitate back again to confinement. Many become really happier in gaol than out of it—at least, when the work is light and the dietary liberal. Such men or women let loose find it very hard indeed to earn their living; they are in a measure morally disqualified for the task, which is not quite a light one for the ordinary labourer. The taint of crime excludes them from many an employment. Police surveillance may to such prove like the fascinating gaze of the serpent, leaving no practical alternative to falling helpless into the open jaws of ruin. It is a rather strange coincidence that, while surveillance is found mischievous in Egypt, it should just have been introduced or restored in India by the new Code of Criminal Procedure. It was once proposed to limit surveillance to a term equal to that of the imprisonment awarded in the same case. It should be imposed only in cases of reconviction, and even in such cases should be alternative to finding sureties for good behaviour.

IN RECOMMENDING THE INTRODUCTION OF THE provisions of the First Offenders Act in Egypt, in preference to the suggestion of Lord Cromer for the wider application of the birch, Sir Raymond West, in an article in the Journal of the Society of Comparative Legislation, points out the advantages of the law which, though it now forms a part of our Criminal Code, is, to our great regret, seldom acted upon by our magistrates.

Here the example might be followed of the English First Offenders Act, which has worked with excellent effect. It has been imitated in India, and there is no obvious reason why it should not suit Egypt equally well. The first true consciousness in a parent of his responsibility for his child's moral guardianship is sometimes aroused by having to become answerable for producing him for punishment in case of a second delinquency. It is a wholesome tonic, which may be administered liberally in a disordered state of society without any fear of serious injury.

CRIMINAL CASES OF 1900.

IV.—OTHER ACTS.

It is doubtful whether a proceeding under the first part of sec. 2 and under sec. 3 of Act XIII of 1859 is a criminal proceeding. There is no offence committed:—Averam Das v. Abdul Rahim, 4 C. W. N. 201; 27 Cal. 131; Re Ram Sarup, 4 C. W. N. 253. Money not to be repaid till after the expiration of the agreement is a loan, and not money advanced on account of work to be performed:—Tangi v. Hall, 23 Mad. 203; Queen-Empress v. Kandappa, Weir 456, see also p. 455. As to money to be repaid out of wages, the Act applies:—Queen-Empress v. Talukanam, 7 Mad. 131.

In Queen-Empress v. Sonai Mugh, 27 Cal. 654, it was held that there was no jurisdiction in the High Court to hear appeals from the Chittagong Hill Tracts under Act XXII of 1860.

An open verandah is an "open place" within sec. 34 of Act V of 1861, as amended by Act VIII of 1895:—Khan Baputi v. Bispati, 4 C. W. N. xcii; 27 Cal. 655.

A Magistrate is not competent under sec. 22 of Act I of 1871 to pass a sentence of fine, but only an award of compensation:—Bhagirathi v. Gangadhar, 5 C. W. N. 32; 27 Cal. 992.

An order under sec. 54 of Act VII of 1878 must be simultaneous with the other punishment inflicted:—Ainuddi v. Queen-Empress, 27 Cal. 450.

Secs. 19, 20 of Act XI of 1878 are so interwoven that no offence can be committed under the first paragraph of sec. 20, unless the offence in sec. 19 is also committed:—Ahmed Hossein v. Queen-Empress, 4 C. W. N. 750; 27 Cal. 692. A servant of a person exempted under sec. 27 sent to shoot birds for him is not liable under the Arms Act (Queen-Empress v. Ganga Din, 22 All. 118), nor a volunteer who is exempted generally (Queen-Empress v. Luke, 22 All. 323). A licensee is liable to punishment under sec. 22 for sale by manager, though the goods were not sold with his knowledge and consent (Queen-Empress v. Tyab Ali, 24 Bom. 423).

The expression "signing otherwise than as a witness" in sec. 61 of Act I of 1879 means the writing of a person's name by himself or by his authority with intent to authenticate a document as being that of the person whose name is so written. The word "person" in secs. 61, 64 includes a member of a trading partnership:—Queen-Empress v. Khetter Mohan, 4 C. W. N. 140; 27 Cal. 324. Sec. 29 of Sch. I contemplates an instrument contemporaneous with the advance and loan, and not a case of assignment by way of mortgage to secure a pre-existing debt:—Queen-Empress v. Debendra, 4 C. W. N. 524; 27 Cal. 587. The execution of a document which on its face requires to be and was unstamped is not within sec. 67 but under sec. 61:—Queen-Empress v. Soma, 23 Mad. 155.

The word "compartment" in sec. 110 of Act IX of 1890 means a completely partitioned division:—In re Dadabhai, 21 Bom. 293.

Copies of entries in the books of a Bank not a "Company" within sec. 2, cl. 1 of Act XVIII of 1891 are not admissible:—Empress v. McGuire, 4 C. W. N. 433.

A license under Act XII of 1896 in the name of one person does not, on his death before expiration of the period of license, descend to his heir and partner in business:—Re Madho, 22 All. 441.

If an order for detention in a Reformatory School in substitution for transportation or imprisonment is not properly passed, the High Court is not debarred by sec. 16 from altering or reversing such order:—Queen-Empress v. Makimuddin, 27 Cal. 133. An order under the Act, when the age of the offender is not found, is without jurisdiction (Ibid). The Appellate Court can pass an order under the Act in supersession of an order of imprisonment passed by a Magistrate but only when there is evidence, or after taking evidence as to age:—Dy. Leg. Rem. v. Kopol, 4 C. W. N. 225.

An arrest by the Excise Sub-Inspector in a jungle, when unaccompanied by the Police, of persons found illicitly distilling liquor is legal under sec. 39 of Act VII of 1878 (B. C.):—In re Hriday, 4 C. W. N. 245.

A "ferry" in Act III of 1884 (B. C.) means the exclusive right to carry passengers across the stream on payment of tolls:—Government v. Senyat Ali, 4 C. W. N. 348; 27 Cal. 317. An order of daily fine is illegal:—Ram Krishna v. Mohendra, 27 Cal.

565. See also 1 B. L. R. O. C. 41: 18 W. R. 49: 25 W. R. 6.

The jurisdiction of a Magistrate under sec. 3 of Act II of 1889 (B. C.) is ousted when a bond fide claim to a private fishery is shown:—Sriram v. Dino, 4 C. W. N. 247.

Under sec. 13 of Act I of 1892 (B. C.) a chowkidar is to assist private persons in making arrests and to report such arrests, but cannot receive persons after arrest by private persons or re-arrest them:—Kolai v. Kalu, 4 C. W. N. 252; 27 Cal. 366.

A dustbin is not part of the street within sec. 307 of Act I of 1884 (Mad.):—Perumal v. Mun. Com., 23 Mad. 164. As to liability under bye-laws being affected by a subsequent Act, see Parimanan v. Chairnan, etc., 23 Mad. 213.

An omission to perform the conditions of a license is not "doing any act in breach" of a condition:—Queen-Empress v. Venkatasami, 23 Mad. 220.

Under sec. 249 of Act III of 1888 (Bom.) the Municipality has no power to direct construction of urinals in a specified place:—In re Khimji, 24 Bom. 75. Sec. 381 relates to low ground not low-lying ground:—Mun. Com. v. Hari, 24 Bom. 125.

Where a Magistrate issues a warrant under sec. 46 of Act XV of 1883 (N.-W. P.) for arrears of municipal taxes, he acts in a ministerial capacity and has no jurisdiction to enquire whether arrears are due:—Ellis v. Mun. Board, 22 All. 111. As to the power of Boards in the N.-W. P. and Oudh to delegate, generally, their authority to make complaints in respect of municipal offences, see Powell v. Mun. Board, 22 All. 123.

Mortgagees - Notice of defect in title - Constructive notice - Enquiry.

BARNHART v. GREENSHIELDS (9 Moore P. C. 18) followed.

The mortgagees in this case were Sayer, Slater and Hodgson. They claimed certain cottage property in Wimbledon under two conveyances from one Gilbert. Those cottages belonged to a Dr. Alfred Hunt, a medical practitioner of Hammersmith. Dr. Hunt in 1894 having had a serious palsytic seizure gave up his practice and with his wife the Plaintiff retired to Hastings. Here they became very friendly with a house agent called Gilbert. Dr. Hunt died in June 1898, and letters of administration with the Will annexed were granted to his widow, the Plaintiff. Gilbert died in the same year, and the Defendant Miss Luck, who was a clerk in Gilbert's service, was appointed his executrix and residuary legatee and devisee. She made no defence to this action. The mortgagee Defendants alleged that in March 1896 Dr. Hunt had by deed gifted some of his cottages to Gilbert and in October conveyed the whole of his cottages to Gilbert for a consideration of £12,000. The mortgagees claimed for advances of £6,000 made to Gilbert on the security of those cottages. The Plaintiff, Mrs. Hunt, sought to have it declared that the said deeds of March and October 1896 were forgeries and assuming that her husband did sign them he was insane at the time.

The learned Judge on these questions of fact found against Plaintiff. A question of law was raised on her behalf. It was urged that assuming that the deeds were executed by Dr. Hunt and that at that time he was of sound disposing mind yet the mortgagees could not succeed for that they had constructive notice of a defect in Gilbert's title, because Woodhams, their agent, in his report on the property had ascertained that the tenants paid rent to a house agent called Woodrow, who, if Defendants had taken the trouble to enquire they would have discovered, was receiving same not for Gilbert but for Dr. Hunt.

This contention did not find favour with the learned Judge, who observes that the Courts are not now inclined to extend the doctrine of constructive trust. The law was stated in the above-named case of Barnhart v. Greenshields, it was not the duty of mortgagees to enquire to whom the tenants in occupation paid the rents. Knight v. Bowger (2 De G. & J. 421) rested on a different principle.

Action against mortgagees dismissed; as against Miss Luck the motion for judgment would stand over for the present.

Mr. Upjohn, Q. C., and Mr. Webster for the Plaintiff.

Mr. Hughes, Q. C., Mr. R. Isaacs, Q. C., and Mr. Church for the Mortgagees.

QUEEN'S BENCH DIVISION.—BAHAN v. WRIGHT AND OTHERS. Before Mr. JUSTICE WILLS and a SPECIAL JURY. 1st November 1900.

Libel—Reprinting a police-notice.

This was an action for damages for libel by Armenag Bahan, a native of Smyrna, who has been a turf commission agent and book-maker in London for some years past. Mr. Bahan was at one time in partnership in a tobacco business with his brother Christopher. Since taking up his own present business, Mr. Bahan was earning £1,500 a year. He sued the Defendants, the printer and publisher of the leading journal, the Times, and its proprietor, for libellous innuendo in the following paragraph which appeared in one of its issue:—

"The Metropolitan Police have published the following particulars—Wanted on a warrant for stealing pearls to the value of £5,000 and upwards (since recovered) Christopher Bahan (age and description then given). Until recently a member of the London County Council and candidate for Parliament in St. Georges-in-the-East, also a member of the National Liberal Club: mother resides at No. 1, Woodstock Road, Uxboof Road. Has a brother known as 'Darkey,' a book-maker well-known to the City Police, who frequents the Empire and Café Manico."

The latter portion and more particularly the words "well-known to the Police" were complained of.

The Defendants denied the innuendoes, said they were true in substance and in fact. The Defendants had refused to apologise, alleging that they had by no means exceeded their rights and privileges of a journalist.

The Plaintiff was examined at length, and complained that in consequence of such publication he had lost a large number of customers.

In the result the jury awarded Plaintiff £100 damages.

Mr. Jelf, Q. C., and Mr. Warde for the Plaintiff.

Mr. McCall, Q. C., and Mr. Eldon Banks for the Journal.

v.

THE KING.

This application arose out of the Dumbell Banking Company's failure. The Petitioner was Mr. C. Banks Nelson, one of the Directors of that Company since 1884. He presented this petition from two convictions at two separate trials in the Deemsters Court in the Isle of Man. The first conviction was on an indictment charging him with being a party to the fraudulent falsification of the balance-sheet of the said Bank and with fraudulently securing overdrafts. The second indictment charged him with fraudulent misappropriation of the funds and 'securities' of the Bank. He was sentenced to three years' imprisonment on the first conviction and to five years' on the second; the sentence to run concurrently.

The petition stated that Petitioner had been for many years a barrister and solicitor in that island and also was a J. P. and was possessed of ample means to meet his liabilities at the time of the overdrafts upon the Bank. He pleaded entire ignorance of banking business when he accepted the directorship, that he had signed the balance-sheet bona fide, believing the representations made by the manager of the Bank and accepting as correct the report of the auditors. The population of the Island was 60,000 including women and children, 10,000 persons were interested in the concerns of the Bank as depositors, shareholders, &c., and there were not many people in the island who were not involved in the Bank's affairs. The Petitioner had been constantly subjected to violent demonstrations against him, even at the trial and it was impossible for him to obtain an impartial and fair trial.

On the second indictment he was tried before a second jury. Petitioner contended that grave injustice was done to him by the ruling that evidence of his solvency at the time the moneys were obtained was irrelevant in the consideration of whether he had been guilty of fraud, but for which ruling he submitted he would have been acquitted; the jury had retired and were 6 hours in considering their verdict, and the law was again explained to them, and then were locked up until the following Monday to consider their verdict. There was a great demonstration against the jury not convicting him. On Monday they convicted him on the first count only with a recommendation to mercy.

After hearing Mr. Lawson Walton, K. C., for the Petitioner, their Lordships granted leave to appeal on the second indictment, not the first.

LORD DAVEY.

LORD LINDLEY.

SIR RICHARD COUCH.
1901.

Heard, 19, February.

Judgment, 9, March.

MUSST. JAFRI BEGUM and TASSADDUK HUSAIN.

v.

SYED ALI RIZA under the guardianship of Mahomed Riza.

Limitation Act (XV of 1877), Sch. II, Art. 91—Suit for declaration that portion of award invalid—Arbitrator, powers of—Devolution of estate, altering the—Partition.

This was an appeal from a judgment of the Judicial Commissioners of Oudh modifying the decree of the District Judge of Sitapur.

The litigation relates to the property of one Syed Ashik Ali, a Shiah Mahomedan, who died on the 15th January 1885, leaving him surviving two widows Ajabunnissa and Najibunnissa and two daughters by the former, the Appellant Jafri Begum, and Abbasi Begum, the mother of the minor Respondent.

In or about 1881 Jafri Begum married the 2nd Appellant Tassadduk Husain, and three years later Abbasi Begum married the abovenamed Mahomed Riza.

At the time of Syed Ashik Ali's death Tassadduk was 25 years of age and Mahomed Riza 18 years of age. Upon the death of Ashik Ali questions arose regarding the rights of the various members of his family in and to his estate.

Special family custom was asserted and in order to ascertain amicably the rights of the respective claimants one Mahfuz Ali, the brother of Ashik Ali, deceased, was appointed arbitrator by mutual consent.

The reference was as follows:—

"As the deceased Syed Ashik Ali has on the 15th January 1885 departed this mortal world therefore we with our free will and consent appoint Syed Mahfuz Ali Sahib, Rais of Karba Pihani, Hurdai District, who is our elder and patron as umpire for the decision of the arrangement (or management) of the estate and adjustment of the dispute of the heirs of the deceased one with another."

The award provided—

That the two daughters should be absolute owners of the whole property in equal shares, that neither should have the right to partition her share.

That Tassadduk Husain should be the manager of the whole property and render half-yearly accounts to each of the daughters. The fifth clause of the award was in the following terms:—

5. That since the partition and sub-division of an integral estate belonging to a well-known gentleman, is calculated to lead to its ruin and destruction, the principle of partition should not be considered legal (i.e., eligible) in this estate, so that the constitution of the estate should continue as usual, and there may be no occasion for the mischief-monger to raise troubles.

The said award was presented to the Sub-Registrar of the District for registration on the said 19th January 1885, when, being of opinion that under sec. 88 of Act 3 of 1877, (the Indian Registration Act, 1877), which deals with documents executed by a public functionary, he was entitled to refer to the arbitrator for information respecting such document, and to require of him a description of the property according to the provision of sec. 21 of the Act, he sent the said award back to the arbitrator, calling upon him to specify the property dealt with by such award.

The said arbitrator, upon receipt of the said award, drew up a list of the property which he had dealt with by his award.

Disputes soon after arose, Abbasi Begum's title being denied in the Revenue Courts, she was referred to a civil suit.

On the 22nd March 1890 she instituted the present suit, and on her death her son, the present Respondent, was put on the record as her representative.

By her plaint she claimed separate possession by partition of one-half share of the estate of Ashik Ali with mesne profits. She alleged that the whole 8 biswas, 5 biswanses recorded on Ashik Ali's name at the time of his death constituted a portion of his estate, and that 5 biswas thereof had never been gifted to Appellant. She also alleged that on 21st September 1883 Tassadduk Husain had from funds in his hands as manager purchased in his own name a share of the village Ludhai and she claimed one half of it.

The Defendants filed a very lengthy written statement, but the material pleas may be reduced to five.

- (1) That the suit was barred by limitation.
- (2) That by special family custom, the widows of the deceased excluded the daughters from inheritance.
- (3) That the Plaintiff could claim no title under the award, giving her a right to partition, and independent of the retention of Tassadduk Husain as manager.
- (4) That 5 biswas in Kukargoti constituted the separate property of Jafri Begum, and
- (5) That the share in Ludhai was acquired by Tassadduk Husain from his separate funds.

The District Judge fixed 18 issues raising these, and a number of collateral and immaterial questions. On a subsequent date he began the examination of the first witness Tassadduk Husain, and on the 20th April 1892 came to the conclusion that he would dispose of certain legal arguments, and postpone the determination of the amount of mesne profits till execution of the decree.

On the 21st April 1892, he delivered judgment, and decided that Plaintiff was entitled to a half share in the estate, that it was inadvisable to partition, that sufficient cause had not been shown to remove Tassadduk Husain from his position as manager, and decreed Plaintiff's one-half of the profits, the exact amount to be determined at the time of execution of the decree.

From this decree the Plaintiff alone appealed, and the Judicial Commissioners remanded the case for proper trial and determination of the other issues.

Further evidence was taken on remand, and on questions now material, the District Judge found

- (1) That the suit was not barred by limitation.
- (2) That the custom relied on by Defendants had not been established.
- (3) That the 5 biswas in dispute in Kukargoti had been given by Ashik Ali to Jafri Begum as dowry, but that the award in regard thereto was not binding, because the arbitrator was functus officio at the time of expressing his opinion.

- (4) That Tassadduk Husain had purchased the share in Ludhai from his private funds.

After the receipt of these findings, the Judicial Commissioners passed final judgment. They confirmed the findings that the suit was not barred by limitation, and that the alleged custom had not been proved. They also agreed with the District Judge that the arbitrator had exceeded his powers in attempting to decide that Jafri Begum was the owner of 5 biswas in Kukargoti, but came to the conclusion that the gift of this property to Jafri Begum had not been established, and that Ludhai had been purchased from the profits of Ashik Ali's estate. They also held that the clause in the award in restraint of partition was invalid, and that Tassadduk Husain could be removed from the post of manager. In the result a decree for separate possession of one-half of the property in suit was passed in favour of the Plaintiff, together with mesne profits.

For the Appellant Mr. Branson, inter alia, contended that the suit, so far as it was to set aside an award, was barred by Art. 91 of the Indian Limitation Act having been acted upon more than three years before suit. That the proceedings of the Registrar did not affect or invalidate the award.

That the first Court was right in its finding as to Mouzah Ludhai, that under sec. 211, C. P. C., mesne profits could only be given by the decree until possession or until expiration of 3 years from the date of decree.

Mr. Degruyther for the Respondent supported the decision of the Judicial Court. He submitted that the opinion of the arbitrator after the return of the award to him by the Registrar was gratuitous, outside the reference to arbitration and was made when he was functus officio; so far as the award deals with specific interests it is good. He referred to the Transfer of Property Act, sec. 11.

In this case LORD LINDLEY delivered their Lordships' judgment and said their Lordships would humbly advise His Majesty to dismiss the appeal with costs.

The important portion of such judgment is as follows:—"As regarded the defence that the suit was barred by limitation of time their Lordships were of opinion that this suit was based on the award and was not a suit to set it aside. No doubt the Plaintiff contended that the fifth clause prohibiting partition was invalid, or, at any rate, was not binding on him, and that the arbitrator having made his award was then functus officio and had no jurisdiction to make the entry which he afterwards did make respecting the five biswa share of Kukargoti. But those contentions did not bring the case within Art. 91, Sch. 2 of the Indian Limitation Act, 1877. Under that Act a suit to cancel or set aside an award must be brought within three years from the time when the facts entitling the Plaintiff to have it cancelled or set aside became known to him. It was obvious that that limitation had no application to the controversy respecting the five biswas of Kukargoti. A Plaintiff who contended that an arbitrator had no power to make an unauthorized addition to an award already made and sought to be enforced by him was not in any sense seeking to cancel or set aside the award neither did the contention that the fifth clause was ultra vires and invalid bring the case within the Act. The Plaintiff disputed the legal effect of that particular clause, but did not seek to cancel or set aside the award. On the contrary, he sought to enforce it so far as it was operative in point of law. As regarded the effect of the fifth clause their Lordships agreed with the Judicial Commissioner that it afforded no defence to the presentation. It might have bound the parties who agreed amongst themselves to abide by it. But as against the present Plaintiff the clause had no effect whatever. The arbitrator had no power to alter the course of legal devolution in a mode at variance with the ordinary principles of Mahomedan law in the absence of a special custom prevailing in the family. He had no power to make a property which was divisible by law indivisible for ever."

Mr. Branson, for the Appellant.

Mr. Degruyther for the Respondent.

Appeal dismissed with costs.

TESTAMENTARY AND INTESTATE JURISDICTION.

SALE, J. } In the goods of SRIMATI GOLAP
1901. } SUNDARI DASSI, deceased.
25, March.]

Probate and Administration Act (V of 1881), sec. 17—Succession Act (X of 1865), sec. 194—Renunciation by sole executor—Letters of administration with copy of Will, application for—Renunciation, withdrawal of, before actual grant to another party.

The deceased was a woman of the town. She died leaving a Will whereof she expressly appointed her father Jogeswar Dass sole executor and shebait of certain Thakur established by her. She gave the income of her estate to the executor for life. The Will directed that on the death of the executor the foster daughter of the deceased Noni Bala Dassi should be the shebait of the Thakur.

In September last Noni Bala applied to the Vacation Judge for letters of administration to the estate of the deceased with a copy of her Will annexed alleging that the sole executor had by a letter, dated the 11th September last, renounced the executorship and had besides signed his consent at foot of her petition which had been explained to him by an interpreter of the Court.

Pratt, J., who heard the application, ordered citation to issue to the Government solicitor and no order for grant to the Petitioner was then passed.

In November last Jogeswar Dass entered a caveat against the grant of letters of administration to Noni Bala and filed his affidavit in support alleging that he had not renounced the executorship, that facts had been misrepresented to him, that he had never signed the alleged letter of renunciation, and that he had not understood what he was consenting to in the petition of Noni Bala. He also filed an application for grant of probate to him and the usual affidavit as to assets.

Affidavits were filed on behalf of Noni Bala alleging that the renunciation was voluntary.

The matter now came on for argument on caveat.

Mr. B. Chuckeravarti (with him Mr. Garth).—The executor having renounced he cannot obtain probate. The question as to whether he renounced voluntarily cannot be decided on affidavits, and the matter should be tried on oral evidence.

Mr. A. Chaudhuri (with him Mr. O'Kinealy).—Assuming that there was no fraud and the renunciation was voluntary, still it was competent to his client to recall the renunciation and ask for probate before actual grant to any other party. This was the law in England and will govern the Courts here. See In the goods of Robert Morant (L. R. 3 P. & D. 151), In the goods of Gill (L. R. 3 P. & D. 113).

Held—Following the English law that the executor who has renounced may, before it has been recorded and actual grant made to any other party, ask that the renunciation be not given effect to and probate granted to him.

Probate was granted to the sole executor who was alleged to have renounced.

Messrs. T. H. Wilson & Co., Attorneys for the Executor.

[CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION.]

APPEAL FROM ORDER
Nos. 166 AND 167 OF 1899.

HILL, J. } MAHARAJA DURGA CHARAN LAHA
BRETT, J. } and others, Defendants,
1901. } Appellants,
12, March. } v.
HATEM MANDUL and others,
Plaintiffs, Respondents.

Res judicata—Questions decided by Settlement Officer—Fair and equitable rent, determination of—Status of tenants, decision as to—Landlord and tenant, suit between on application by landlord—Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), Ch. X—Decision of Settlement Officer, not contested.

These were two appeals preferred on the 9th May 1899 from an order of Babu Rajendra Kumar Bose, Subordinate Judge of 24-Pergunnahs, dated the 9th March 1899, reversing an order of Babu Srigopal Chatterjee, Munsif of Baraset, dated the 24th September 1898.

The facts of these two cases are as follows:—

The Appellants are the zemindars of Taraf Chaurasi, Thana Howrah, and a survey of the lands of that estate was made under the provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act. In the course of the proceedings, the Defendants-Appellants, the landlords, put in petitions to the Settlement Officer under sec. 104 of the Bengal Tenancy Act praying that he would under the 2nd clause of that section settle fair and equitable rents in respect of the lands held by the Plaintiffs-Respondents as tenants. Similar applications were made with regard to other tenants. The Settlement Officer held proceedings under the 2nd clause of sec. 104, Bengal Tenancy Act, and on the 6th August 1896 and the 25th July 1896 delivered his decisions in the cases affecting the Respondents in appeals Nos. 166 and 167, respectively. Notices were duly served on the Respondents in those cases, but that they did not offer any evidence. No appeals were preferred against the decisions in those cases.

The suits, out of which the present appeals arose, were filed by the Plaintiffs-Respondents in appeals Nos. 166 and 167 on the 11th November 1897 and the 17th January 1898, respectively. The claim in each case was substantially the same, viz., to have the class of tenants to which the Plaintiff belonged determined, and the nature of his holding, i.e., whether the rent was enhancible or not. In each case the Plaintiff claimed to be a permanent tenure holder holding lands within specified boundaries on a rent permanently fixed, which had been settled in gross and not according to any particular rate on the area of the land and which was not liable to enhancement. The correctness of the decision of the Settlement Officer in the case of each in the proceedings taken under the 2nd clause of sec. 104 of the Bengal Tenancy Act was impugned, and the relief prayed for in each was a declaration that the Plaintiff was a permanent tenure-holder and that his jama was not liable to enhancement, that the finding of the Settlement Officer was erroneous, ultra vires and void, and that it be set aside, and that it be declared that Plaintiff's rent was not liable to be enhanced notwithstanding that the land had been found on measurement to be a little more than that settled with him at the time of the original settlement.

The Settlement Officer found in the case of each of the Respondents that he was an occupancy raiyat and that the prevailing rate of rent was Re. 1 per local bigha, and in consequence of excess land held by them he fixed the fair and equitable rent for the Respondents in appeal No. 166 at Rs. 34-14-5 instead of Rs. 16-14-5-2 as admitted and the Respondent in appeal No. 167 at Rs. 33-7-2.

The Munsif dismissed both the suits holding that the questions of the settlement of fair and equitable rent and the status of the Plaintiffs had been decided by the Settlement Officer, that his decisions had the force of decrees and as they had become final the matters were res judicata between the parties. No allegation of fraud to invalidate the decisions of the Revenue officer was advanced.

The Subordinate Judge on appeal reversed the findings of the Munsif and remanded the suits for trial on the merits. He held that as there was no dispute as to the entries made in consequence of the decision of the Settlement Officer under sec. 104 of the Bengal Tenancy Act and as there was no decision by him of any such dispute under sec. 106 of the Act, and as the Settlement Officer had no power to settle the rents under sec. 112 of the Act, therefore his decision could not be held to bar the suits of the Plaintiffs or to make the matter in issue in these suits res judicata between the parties.

The Defendants preferred the present appeals against that order of the Subordinate Judge, and it was contended on their behalf that the Subordinate Judge entirely misconceived the nature of the proceedings before the Settlement Officer, and that he was wrong in holding that the decision of that officer did not operate as res judicata.

Held—That the proceedings having been taken under cl. 2 of sec. 104 of the Bengal Tenancy Act in consequence of applications made by the landlord for a settlement of the rent the decisions of the Settlement Officer had the effect of decrees and everything necessary to be decided for the purpose of arriving at the decisions in those cases must be held to have been decided in them:

That it being necessary to determine the status of the tenants in order to decide what was a fair and equitable rent, and that question as also the question as to the fair and equitable rent having been decided, they are now res judicata between the parties, and cannot be re-opened in the present suits. The Secretary of State v. Nitai Singh, (I. L. R. 23 Cal. 257) distinguished.

Sir Griffith Evans (with him Babus Debendra Nath Ghose and Charu Chandra Ghose) for the Appellants.
Babus Nilmadhab Bose and Shib Chandra Palit for the Respondents.

Appeals allowed:

Decrees of the first Court restored.

REPORTS (See Index.)

The constitution of the Division Courts, taking effect on and from Wednesday, the 10th April 1901, and until further orders, is as follows:—

PRESIDENCY GROUP.—The Hon'ble the Chief Justice, and Mr. Justice Banerjee.

RAJSHAHYE GROUP.—Mr. Justice Hill and Mr. Justice Brett.

PATNA GROUP.—Mr. Justice Rampini and Mr. Justice Gupta.

BURDWAN GROUP.—Mr. Justice Ghose and Mr. Justice Taylor.

CRIMINAL BUSINESS.—Mr. Justice Ameer Ali and Mr. Justice Pratt.

PRIVY COUNCIL DEPARTMENT.—The Hon'ble the Chief Justice and Mr. Justice Banerjee.

On the Original Side the arrangements will continue as before.

AT THE HEARING OF CIVIL RULE No. 2780 OF 1900, which came on before the learned Chief Justice and Mr. Justice Banerjee, the following question was raised, viz., "Whether a simple mortgagee is a person entitled to come in and have a sale held in execution of a rent decreée set aside under sec. 310A of the Code of Civil Procedure." In argument the case of Nitya Nund Patra v. Hira Lal Karmakar and another, reported in 5 C. W. N.

63, decided by Rampini and Wilkins, JJ., on the 22nd March 1900, was cited. In view of the decision in that case the learned Judges (the Chief Justice and Banerjee, J.) on the 8th of March last referred the question to a Full Bench for determination.

THE LATE MR. GLADSTONE'S INTENTION TO RESTRICT the powers of Courts of Record in taking proceedings in contempt, recently formed the subject-matter of a question in the House of Commons. The proposal of Mr. Gladstone alluded to, is one which was made on the 24th October 1882.

"I venture, he said, to intimate to the House that the law of Contempt of Court is a subject which has been brought much of late into the popular view, both on this side and the other side of the Channel, and the Government have it in contemplation—not during the present short sittings, but at the regular commencement of the next Session—they have it in contemplation—they hope at a very early period—to submit a measure dealing with the alteration of the present law."

The powers of the Court have in recent times undergone considerable limitations. The chief of these are that such powers should be "sparingly" used that, even then, "in the interest of justice." Mr. Justice Bruce refused to take notice of a personal attack on him in the newspaper press on the ground that he could afford to ignore it (2 C. W. N. cl). The power of Court to take proceedings in cases of contempt not committed in the presence of the Court or in a pending proceeding was discussed by the Judicial Committee in McLeod's case where Lord Morris held that committal for contempt for what is termed "scandalizing the Court itself" had practically become obsolete (3 C. W. N. cccxvi: s. c. 1899, A. C. 549) and also that a judge taking such proceedings without sufficient justification may be mulct in costs (3 C. W. N. cccxlv). No doubt last year, in the Birmingham Daily Argus case (Queen v. Gray) Russell, L. C. J., maintained that proceedings in contempt would lie for scandalizing the Court. But in the Birmingham case proceedings were taken because the article complained of was of such a "mischievous and vulgar character" that the "pressure of public necessity" required its repression. In this connection our articles in 3 C. W. N. cccxlii, and 4 C. W. N. cliv (154), may be referred to.

BELGIAN EXECUTIVE AND JUDICIARY.

SIPIDO CASE.

The Society of Comparative Legislation publishes in its journal a very interesting article on the "Legal Aspects of the Sipido Case" contributed by Dr. Speyer of the Brussels Bar. Sipido, it will be remembered, fired at the Prince of Wales at a railway station in Brussels in April last. The prisoner, who was a boy of fifteen, was tried for the offence according to the Belgian law. The boy, it would seem, had bought a revolver and cartridges worth only 3 fr. 50 c. in all, and shot at the Prince in pursuance of a bet of five francs against two taken with some other young fellows. The account of the trial, as given by Dr. Speyer, is remarkable as shewing to what extent the judicial tribunals in Belgium respect the laws of the country regardless of all questions of political expediency or diplomatic complications. This was a case which might have easily lead to political disruption with a powerful neighbour. But neither the Belgian judiciary nor the Government would interpose on such account and prevent the law from taking its usual course. Sipido was tried by a jury who found that he was guilty of attempting to commit a voluntary homicide and that his attempt was premeditated but that he had not acted with criminal discernment. The meaning of the last finding is, that being of immature age, he was not able to realize to the fullest extent the consequences of his act. Upon such finding the Court of Assizes in Belgium is bound to acquit an accused but may order the detention of such youthful offender in a reformatory till he is of mature age (21 years). The judges after acquittal, ordered Sipido's detention in a reformatory. But the law in Belgium, unlike the provision of the Indian Code, allows an appeal from such order and does not warrant the keeping of a youthful offender in custody pending such appeal. Sipido who had been in custody and to whom bail had been refused throughout the trial had to be released pending the appeal and the lad availed himself of this opportunity to cross the frontier. The Government in England made this a ground of complaint and public feeling there rose very high against the Belgian Government. The object of Dr. Speyer's article is to shew that the Government of Belgium could not interfere with the course of justice and that of all countries England should be the last to advise any such course. "Any attempt," says Dr. Speyer, "from within or without to coerce the Courts of Justice into acting against the law or their conscience is an attack on the rights and liberties of every single citizen, and as such must be resisted to the utmost." This is a principle long and lovingly cherished by the English people and the learned Doctor very appropriately cites the authority of historian Hume to remind them "that England's fleets, her power, her monarchy, her Parliament exist in reality for one object only: to maintain the liberty and the independence of the King's Bench."

It seems to us that Dr. Speyer has made out a clear case in vindication of the honour and credit of both the government and judiciary of Belgium.

After Sipido's appeal was rejected by the Court of Cassation he was traced to Paris. Persons under an order of detention in a reformatory are not contemplated under the extradition treaties. But the Belgian Government, being the guardian of youths under order of detention in a reformatory, claimed in loco parentis the custody of Sipido and the French Government agreeing, he was brought to Belgium, not as a fugitive criminal, but as a run away boy claimed by his father or his locum tenens and put into the reformatory. This not only removes any doubt as to the bond fides of the Belgian Government but entitles the government to respect of every civilized community for its regard for the law.

Review.

CODE OF CRIMINAL PROCEDURE, Sixth Edition, being the Third Edition of Act V of 1898. By G. S. Henderson, M. A., Bar-at-Law. Weekly Notes, Printing Works and Thacker, Spink & Co., Calcutta, 1901. Price Rs. 16.

That in less than three years the author should have brought out a third edition of the Code of 1898 is in itself a remarkable proof of the demand of the work before us, and it is a demand that its merits may fairly claim. Of late years, at any rate, this book has steadily pushed its way to the first rank. The rapid exhaustion of the second edition and the no less rapid accumulation of decisions on the New Code, is ample justification for a third edition. The present edition includes cases selected from the Indian Law Reports series, the Calcutta Weekly Notes and the Punjab Records down to March 1891. The scheme and arrangement of this edition follows that of its predecessors, and is familiar to its readers. But we cannot help observing that the matter might have been more logically and systematically recast. Even if the notes had been re-arranged and classified, without any substantial alteration, under suitable headings, the work would have been without a rival in the field of law to which it relates. The notes are pretty full and the various Reports have been fairly drawn upon for that purpose. The cases from the Punjab Records, though seldom cited in the chartered High Courts, will prove useful to the Courts and practitioners of that province. A large number of cases has been collected from the Weekly Reporter, but we think a good many more might have aptly found a place in the work. Notwithstanding the practice in some quarters to disregard these decisions as "old cases," many of them embody valuable principles which no commentator of the new Code can afford to ignore. The new decisions reported since the last edition have been mostly incorporated in this edition, and this renders it quite up to date. As an example, we may refer to the Full Bench rulings In re Abdur Rahman, 4 C. W. N. 656 : s. c. I. L. R. 27 Cal. 839, to the effect that sec. 537 cures defects under sec. 234, and to the still more recent case of Empress v. Dwarka Nath Mondul, 5 C. W. N. civi (106), that a Presidency Magistrate can revive a complaint dismissed by him without the order having been set aside by the High Court. Sec. 145 of the Code is of vital importance to many, specially in Bengal, and the policy or sense of the section is far from clear and its administration is sometimes positively mischievous and it is little to be wondered that a great number of the recent decisions come under this section. It is satisfactory to note that this section has been fully and carefully commented on. The same remark applies to the Appeal and Revision sections. The Index, which we have tested, includes almost the whole of the new matter added to the notes. On the whole we think that this edition will thoroughly maintain the position of its predecessors as the most reliable edition of the Code of 1898.

BANKRUPTCY COURT.—WARD v. FRY. Before MR. JUSTICE WRIGHT. 12th November 1900.

Trustee in bankruptcy—Money paid away by bankrupt after act of bankruptcy within three months—Sec. 48, Bankruptcy Act, 1883—Wagering contract—Right of trustee to recover.

In this case Plaintiff, the trustee in bankruptcy of one Barratt, a trainer of horses, was suing to recover £500, which Barratt had paid away to the Defendant, a professional betting man. The date of the act of bankruptcy was 6th July 1899 and in due course Barratt was in the end of November 1899 adjudicated a bankrupt. About the end of July 1899 Barratt had paid away two sums of money amounting to £500 to Defendant. £200 were paid as the amount of a bet he had lost with the Defendant and £300 were deposited in respect of other bets with the Defendant. On condition that if Barratt lost those bets, which he did, the deposit was to belong to Defendant.

The question was whether Plaintiff's claim was good for the two sums which he claimed for distribution among Barratt's creditors. Defendant said that he had entered into the transactions in good faith, when he was not aware of any act of bankruptcy on the part of Barratt. That the transaction was a completed transaction previous to the receiving order and so he was entitled to retain the money.

The learned Judge now delivered a considered judgment, he held that it was settled law that there was no distinction in this respect between goods transferred by the bankrupt and monies paid away by him. The same principle applied.

It followed that subject to the proviso in the Bankruptcy Act regarding bond fide transactions, the trustee could sue the recipient from the bankrupt to recover same and in so doing he was not bound to show fraud against the recipient. Wolverhampton Banking Co. (14 Q. B. D. 32). The only protection Defendant could claim was under sec. 49 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, but even if within cl. (d) there was a "contract" or "dealing," it means a transaction having a contractual force involving a legal obligation, here the contract insisted on was an illegal one under 8 and 9 Vict., c. 109, sec. 18 being a wagering transaction and so null and void. The deposit of the £300 did not vary in any material respect from the ordinary payment of a bet. There was no valuable consideration for the change by which the £300 deposited became Defendant's property. The payment in effect was a voluntary one : Manning v. Parcell (7 D. M. & C. 55). The £500 were in truth paid for a debt not recoverable by law, the payment was without consideration. The Plaintiff must therefore succeed.

Mr. Wallace, Q. C., and Mr. Hanvill for the Plaintiff.

DIVORCE COURT.—HAMILTON v. HAMILTON AND ASHBYNHAM. Before MR. JUSTICE GORELL BARNES. 18th March 1901.

Proof of Australian divorce—Second marriage in India.

The Petitioner and Co-respondent were members of the theatrical profession touring in India. The Respondent was the Petitioner's second wife whom the Petitioner married at Bombay. His first wife was an Australian lady, whom he married at Secunderabad, while he was stationed there as an officer in the Indian Army. After that marriage the husband and wife went to reside in New South Wales. While there the first wife obtained a divorce from Petitioner on the ground of his cruelty and intemperate habits. He then gave up his Australian domicile and at Bombay met and married his present wife the Respondent. While at Calcutta he discovered that his wife had been familiar with the Co-respondent, and subsequently the Respondent and Co-respondent were discovered passing as man and wife in other parts of India and ultimately at Clapham near London.

Evidence of the validity of the Australian divorce was given by a member of the English Bar also a member of New South Wales Bar, and the Indian marriage was proved by a certificate produced from the India Office.

The learned Judge pronounced a decree nisi with custody of the child of the marriage to Petitioner.

NOTE.—In the case of Baillet v. Baillet, heard on the 1st March before the same learned Judge where the parties, domiciled French subjects, were married at the Consulate-General of France in London, a French Avocat gave evidence as to the validity of the marriage, and various authorities were referred to including Dicey's Conflict of Laws (1896), Hammeks' Marriage Laws (1887), Re. v. Brampton, 1808, 10 East's Reports, 282.

CHANCERY DIVISION.—RANDT GOLD MINING Co. v. WAINWRIGHT. Before MR. JUSTICE KEKEWICH. 9th November 1900.

Companies Act 1862—Interim injunction—Articles of association—Calls due on shares—Power to vote—Appointment of liquidator—Three-fourth majority.

This matter came on by notice of motion; the Plaintiffs seeking to restrain the Defendant Cyril Frank Wainwright from acting as liquidator of the Plaintiff Company.

The Company was inaugurated on 5th July 1895 with a capital of £800,500 in £1 shares subsequently converted into 320,000 shares of 5 each. The bulk of the shares were issued upon which there was outstanding a small liability. On 30th July 1900, notice was given convening a meeting for the purpose of considering and if thought fit passing resolutions for the sale of the Company's undertaking to a new Company, also for voluntary winding up the Company.

This meeting was held on 8th August, the Chairman declared the resolutions carried; a poll was demanded and the meeting for that purpose was adjourned to 19th September. On that day the Chairman declared that for the resolution were recorded 90,057 votes against 71,080. Later on an extraordinary meeting was held for the purpose of winding up the Company voluntarily, at this meeting the Defendant was appointed liquidator. It appeared that among the votes counted were 41,600 held by the new Balkis Company, these shares had been forfeited for non-payment of calls by the original holders and had since been acquired by the new Balkis Company.

For Plaintiffs it was urged that having regard to Art. 67 of the Articles of Association the shares held by the new Balkis Company had no right to vote, because there were calls due on same. Also that the resolutions passed were bad for want of a  $\frac{3}{4}$ th majority.

The Defendant said there was no call due in respect of any shares in the hands of the new Balkis Company. The call was not made on them, but on the original holders on whose hands they were forfeited and that the  $\frac{3}{4}$ th majority was not essential. The learned Judge arrived at the conclusion that he must hold that under the circumstances sums of money in respect of the shares held by the new Balkis Company by purchase, were still due, and Plaintiffs' contention under the 67th article was sound and effect must be given to it by holding that such shares could not validly vote. An interim injunction would be granted prohibiting the Defendant, who was consequently not properly appointed liquidator, from acting as such.

Mr. Renshaw, Q. C., and Mr. Clowson for the Company.

CHANCERY DIVISION.—In re THE ILFRACOMBE PERMANENT MUTUAL BENEFIT BUILDING SOCIETY. Before MR. JUSTICE WRIGHT. 14th November 1900.

Compulsory Winding Act—Unpaid creditor petitioning, other creditors opposing—Consideration of his right to obtain such order—Right to wind up society not authorized by law.

The above society was legally constituted in 1868, but it ceased to enjoy the full protection of the law in consequence of the repeal of the Building Society's Act, 1836. For some time the society was in a flourishing condition, but owing to the secretary having embezzled its monies the society became in an insolvent condition. With the solitary exception of the Petitioner all the other undisputed creditors agreed and accepted 12s. 6d. in the pound. That payment was made by the directors paying out of their own pockets some £800 in addition to what its assets realized. After paying the rest of the creditors there was sufficient in hand for the Petitioner. He would not take less than 15 in the pound and now applied for an order for compulsory winding up. It appeared that there had been a previous petition for the same purpose, which must have been known to Petitioner, but in which he did not join, but waited until the funds were distributed. The learned Judge in giving his judgment dismissing the petition remarks on the last-mentioned fact as one not disposing him to help the Petitioner. No probable case was shown, upon which he ought to act, that misfeasance proceedings against the directors would be productive of any good effect. There was no reason to suppose that there was any misconduct on their part. The law on the point was clear, that a petitioning creditor is almost entitled ex debito justitiæ to a winding up order, unless it can be shown that he will gain no benefit from it. (In re Chapel House Colliery Co., 24 Ch. D. 259, and In re Uruguay Central Railway Co., 11 Ch. D. 372). On the circumstances of this case the Court held that the Petitioner would gain no benefit from it. Upon the other point the Court said that the only act which justified the society's existence (the Building Society's Act, 1836) had been repealed and the status of the society in consequence was involved in great doubt. This society was formed in 1868 under the powers of that repealed statute and "formed" in the Companies Act, 1862; sec. 4 must mean formed and having its existence recognized under the provisions of another Act; upon both grounds Petitioner failed.

Mr. Terrell, Q. C., and Mr. Waggatt for the Petitioner.

Mr. Swenfen Eady, Q. C., and Mr. Northcote for the Society.

KIFADANGA GARU,

Defendant, Appellant,

v.

MAGUNI (MAGAT) DEVAN

BAKSHI MAHAPATRUJULU,

Plaintiff, Respondent.

Grant, personal or to a family—Presumption—Proof.

The facts of this and the arguments at the previous hearing in November 1900 are to be found at p. lx of the present volume of the Weekly Notes. The case was now re-argued before the committee as above constituted.

During the course of Mr. Branson's statement of his case

SIR RICHARD COUCH referred him to Gopee Krista Gossain v. Gungapersaud Gossain (6 Moo. I. A., p. 53), as the leading case on the point, the real question being for whom was the gift intended; the form of the gift is of little importance. Can you make out that it was a personal gift?

LORD HOBHOUSE.—It seems to be a gift to Brahmins. It is a grant on a consideration, a re-clamation grant; the Raja got a rent.

Mr. Branson referred to 1 Select Reports (1794), p. 7.

LORD HOBHOUSE.—That was a case of an acquisition for money paid down at the time, 1 Sudder Decisions (1852), p. 111. Plaintiff in that case admitted himself out of Court.

SIR RICHARD COUCH.—In the present case it is admitted that they were a joint family.

Mr. Mayne.—And that they had joint property, Fulton's Reports (1843), see pp. 169, 171; 7 Bom. High Court Reports, p. 176; Dharm Das Pandey's case (3 Moo. I. A., p. 240), criterion is from what source the money comes.

LORD HOBHOUSE.—Treating the matter of the name which appears in the grant as a circumstance of small moment.

LORD MACNAGHTEN.—Yes, if the money comes from joint funds.

Mr. Branson also referred to 6 Moo. I. A. at p. 538.

LORD HOBHOUSE.—There is a case in the 19th Weekly Reporter at p. 231.

SIR RICHARD COUCH.—There is a case in the 6th W. R. at p. 69 which shews that property standing in one man's name is no index to his being the real owner.

THE LORD CHANCELLOR. — That is on the assumption that it was a joint estate.

LORD HOBHOUSE.—How do you begin your separate property here, is it not by the grant?

Mr. Branson.—Yes.

LORD DAVEY.—A joint member may hold separate property.

LORD HOBHOUSE. Is this a gift. If it is a gift it is wholly unexplained, you must prove that it is a gift personal to the donee. You have not shown that the donor the Raja was a friend, see Sir Thomas Strange.

SIR RICHARD COUCH referred to Golap Chunder Sarkar's book.

Mr. Branson. The presumption is that if one makes a gift to me he is a friend.

LORD HOBHOUSE.—Where property is acquired by no funds at all, what is the presumption?

Mr. Branson. There Plaintiff must prove that the grantee treated it as joint property. Presumption arises from acquisition. Here there was no use of joint funds.

Mr. Branson then referred to the evidence of possession and next submitted that certain documents which had been since discovered at the collector's office records conclusively proved that the grant was to his client alone. These documents the Madras High Court had wrongly refused to admit on application for a review.

Mr. Mayne for the Respondent submitted that those documents were forgeries, he relied on 3 Moo. I. A., p. 210, and 19 W. R., p. 231.

SIR R. COUCH.—There is a case to the same effect in 13th Moore.

Mr. Mayne.—To claim property as separate property the party who so claims it must show that it was acquired without any detriment to family property. In the case of a gift it is to be ascertained with what intention it was given and with what intention it was received. If you cannot get at that then it must be seen how it was treated and dealt with by the party to whom it was given.

Mitak., Ch. 1, sec. 4, treats of personal consideration consistent with the passage.

LORD HOBHOUSE read from Sir Thomas Strange, see also pp. 216 and 217.

6TH MARCH.

Mr. Branson, before Mr. Mayne resumed his argument, referred their Lordships to 1 Strange, p. 209 (Ed. 1830); Pertab Singh v. Subans Lal (1 Select Reports, p. 121 at p. 122-3); Strange, Vol. 2, p. 365-6 (Shrotrium); 3 Colebrook, para. 332 cf. seq., sloka 345; Mitak., Ch. 1, see 4 sloka 384; Mayne last edition, see secs. 281, 288, 291.

Mr. Mayne, continuing referred to Manu, Ch. 9, 206; the Appellant must bring himself within that article, he must show that the grant was made under circumstances special to himself otherwise it is to be assumed that it was for the benefit of the family.

LORD DAVEY.—What if the origin of the property is not known?

Mr. Mayne.—This was a grant for benefitting Brahmins for the benefit of the grantor. The village is described as Agraharam—Manu, Ch. XI, para. 6.

LORD HOBHOUSE.—By that motive you suggest that the notion of a personal grant is got rid of.

Mr. Mayne.—Yes. He then went on to show that what was done after the grant was consistent with the gift to the family, common enjoyment and common liability going on until 1887. He referred to the receipts down to that year.

The criminal proceedings in 1888 show that for the first time Appellant asserted his possession.

THE COURT.—How is that evidence, moreover, it does not show when Appellant got possession.

Mr. Mayne referred to sec. 13, Evidence Act. He first asserted his right.

LORD HOBHOUSE.—Defendant does not show when he got possession.

LORD DAVEY.—There is a body of evidence that tenants paid rents to Appellant.

Mr. Mayne.—There is no documentary evidence. There is nothing to corroborate the raiyat's evidence, submits that should not be accepted.

Mr. Branson replied.

Maintenance—Value of appeal.

This was an appeal from a decision of Mr. Bleunerhasset, the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh, which had reversed on second appeal the decisions of two lower Courts in Oudh, that of the Subordinate Judge of Rai Bareli and also of the District Judge of Rai Bareli.

The question involved in this suit was whether the Appellant was entitled to the declaration she sought that the right to receive Rs. 70 per month which Chhedu Khan, the Respondent's father, had obtained a decree for, ceased at his death.

Plaintiff is the grand-daughter of one Abdul Hakim Khan to whom one moiety of the Amanwan Talukdari estate belonged. Her interest was one-fourth in that estate. The other Defendant to the suit was Mahommed Said Khan, the talukdar of the 12 annas portion: he admitted Defendant-Respondent's right to receive the said allowance. Abdul Hakim Khan was the brother of Chhedu Khan, and uncle of the Respondent.

Chhedu Khan died on 20th December 1889, and the Respondent had since received the said annuity and was in receipt of it when this suit was instituted.

The ownership of the whole estate Amanwan before the eight-anna share of it came to Abdul Hakim Khan, was with one Aladad Khan; he had two daughters, one of whom married Abdul Hakim Khan, and the other one married Saadat Khan, and these two sons-in-law became, in right of their wives, the owners of one moiety each of the estate.

During the rebellion these two brothers were in confinement, when by means of Respondent's exertions with the rebel Government, they were released. They had been taken prisoners by one Raja Jagpal Singh, the talukdar of Tiloi.

By way of return for such services, on the 31st January 1858 (15th Jamadi-us-Sani 1274 Hijri), Abdul Hakim Khan executed an agreement which covenanted that in consideration of the services rendered, "I shall have no objection to the giving of my brother's half share in the estate, when I get into possession of the estate, rather, at the time of the execution of the lease, I, the declarant, shall myself get the name of the said brother entered therein conjointly with my own."

In addition to the above agreement, there was a special contract made before Major Orr, Deputy Commissioner, attested by him, and signed by Abdul Hakim Khan and Saadat Khan, they stipulating that the names of Chhedu Khan, brother of Abdul Hakim Khan, and of one Shujaat Khan, brother of Saadat Khan, should be entered in the Khewat.

Considerable litigation took place between Chhedu Khan and his brother Abdul Hakim Khan, in 1860, 1863 and 1868, Chhedu Khan claiming a moiety of Abdul Hakim Khan's share for himself and his heirs for ever.

On the 5th August 1863 Major Macandrew, the Deputy Commissioner, decreed to Chhedu Khan Rs. 70 per month from the date Abdul Hakim Khan entered into possession of the Amanwan estate chargeable against the Defendant's share.

Abdul Hakim Khan appealed to the Commissioner, Col. Barrow. He referred the matter to arbitrators; certain talukdars met by consent of parties and addressed the following award to Col. Barrow.

"Under your orders this case was committed to us for disposal. Accordingly we having summoned both the parties, and enquired into the case took from them a deed of agreement to abide by our award. After having taken the deed of agreement, we decide as follows:—

"That from 1871 F. Abdul Hakim should always pay to Chhedu Khan Rs. 70 per mensem, and that the latter should give up his claim in respect of previous years, and should realise from Abdul Hakim Khan Rs. 70 every month.

"Parties being present, our decision stated above was read over to them. Chhedu Khan accepted it but Abdul Hakim Khan did not.

"The arbitration award, together with the deed of agreement, is submitted to you for orders.

"Moreover (we hold) that Chhedu Khan should always remain obedient to Abdul Hakim Khan."

Thereupon Col. Barrow passed the following order:—

"In every way Abdul Hakim's obligation to provide for his brother is proved and it has been likewise acknowledged by public opinion, for a former punchayet awarded, in September 1859, that he should pay Rs. 400 per annum. They did not consider the deed marked B a valid one, but still they decreed the money payment. Mr. Capper in the Revenue Court and Colonel Macandrew in the Civil Court have decreed Rs. 70 per mensem as the sum that should be paid monthly by Abdul Hakim to Chhedu Khan, and now these talukdars without the remotest interest in the matter have fixed on the same amount. They have remitted the arrears, and all things considered, I do not conceive a better decision can be come to. I uphold then the decision of the lower Court awarding Rs. 70 (seventy rupees) a month to Chhedu Khan to be paid by Abdul Hakim, but reverse so much of the decree as awards arrears of instalments."

Such allowance having been continued as aforesaid to Chhedu Khan's son. The present suit was instituted by the Appellant, she having succeeded in two Courts, but ultimately her suit being dismissed by the said Judicial Commissioner, she now appealed to His Majesty in Council.

Mr. Degruyther for the Appellant relied on the arbitration award urging that the right to receive payment was limited to the life of Chhedu Khan and pointed to various misstatements in the Judicial Commissioner's judgment. He referred to (L. R. 12 I. A., p. 163 and to L. R. 12 I. A., p. 214.)

Mr. C. W. Arathoon first raised a preliminary objection to the appeal, urging that as the Appellant's right to the annuity was to one-fourth of the sum of Rs. 70 a month, the Judicial Commissioner under sec. 596 could not give leave to appeal the amount in appeal between the parties to the suit being under the appealable value.

LORD LINDLEY.—But the decision would govern the whole annuity.

Mr. Arathoon.—The Appellant is not interested in the Respondent's right to get the three-fourth from her co-sharer owning the three quarters of the taluk, who moreover has admitted Respondent's right. Chhedu Khan's claim against Abdul Hakim Khan was to half the estate and a claim based on a contract, not a maintenance claim granted out of favour. The obligation Col. Barrow referred to was a legal obligation. Mr. Arathoon referred to the earlier proceedings.

Mr. Degruyther was not called on to reply.

On March 9th Sir Richard Couch delivered their Lordships' judgment advising His Majesty to allow the appeal with costs. The judgment refers to the two cases cited by Mr. Degruyther and concludes as follows:—

Their Lordships did not see in the circumstances under which the award was made any of which would enable them to pronounce that the Rs. 70 a month were to be paid after the death of Chhedu Khan. The last line of the award seemed to indicate that it was for him personally. If Chhedu had any title to a share in the taluk before the Government took possession of it in 1858, he had none after the sanaal which was granted by the Government, as his name was not in it. That was noticed by the Commissioner in the judgment he gave before the reference to the arbitrators. Chhedu's right was only under the agreement, and the Commissioner concluded his judgment by saying that the issue was reduced to "what consideration is Chhedu Khan entitled to in consequence of Abdul Hakim's promises and agreements with him?" The arbitrators said in the award that they had inquired into the case, and they might have considered that justice would be done by giving to Chhedu the Rs. 70 per month for his life, that being a sufficient reward for his services in obtaining the release of Abdul Hakim and Saadat from prison."

Grant—Construction.

This was an appeal from a decision of the Chief Court of the Punjab of 24th January 1898 confirming that of the Divisional Judge of Lahore by which the Plaintiffs-Appellants' claim to proprietary right in the Hajiwah canal 50 miles long in the district of Multan was rejected.

The canal was excavated by the Plaintiffs' grandfather Ghulam Mustafa Khan and their father Ghulam Kadir Khan by permission obtained from the Commissioner of the district in the year 1861 at a cost of about 9 lakhs of rupees expended by the said ancestors of the Plaintiffs, and remained in their possession until 10th December 1888.

It passed in its course from the Sutlej river through many villages owned by persons not parties to this suit, whose consent Plaintiffs' ancestors had obtained under agreements to supply them with water.

The Government waste lands of over 60,000 acres which were farmed by Plaintiffs and others were incapable of cultivation for want of water. The canal terminated in waste lands cultivated by the Plaintiffs' said grandfather, and it was admitted that Government very largely benefited by such undertaking. Farms of waste lands were limited to the period of the existing settlement. In considering the course to be adopted in the new settlement, proposals were made for a lease to Plaintiffs' father of a large tract. After much correspondence these negotiations ended in the Viceroy sanctioning in proprietary right a grant of 60,000 acres to Plaintiffs' father in December 1879. In the settlement records the canal was entered as the property of Plaintiffs said father.

A formal deed was executed on 26th March 1886 after suggestions from Plaintiffs' father that certain of its terms should be amended which was not agreed to. The Chief Secretary to the Punjab Government signed it for the Respondents: Plaintiffs' father signed it on his own behalf.

Upon the death of Plaintiffs' said father disputes arose among his four sons, the Plaintiffs-Appellants being the three younger sons: owing to such quarrel, Government officials took over possession and management of the canal first temporarily then permanently on 27th February 1890.

Plaintiffs then instituted this suit claiming proprietary right in the canal for an account, injunctions and other reliefs.

Defendants denied the Plaintiffs' right to the canal outside the 60,000 acres grant, and relied on the said agreement. The 8th clause was follows:—

"The canal dug by the grantee and known as the Hajiwah shall for the present remain under the management of the said grantee. Provided always that in consideration of the premises the said grantor, his successor and assigns shall at all times hereafter whenever he or they shall think necessary be entitled without the consent of or permission from the said grantee, his heirs, legal representatives and assigns, to take into his or their own hands and control the management and distribution of the water of the said canal without payment of any compensation whatsoever, and further to clear the said canal and recover the cost of clearance and management by a canal rate to be levied on the area irrigated."

The main question for determination in this suit were the rights of the Plaintiffs in the canal prior and subsequent to the deed of the 20th March 1886, the finding on the latter question involved the legal construction of that deed.

On the 7th June 1895, the Divisional Judge delivered judgment, and found

- I. That prior to the 20th March 1886, Plaintiffs had no legal rights in the Hajiwah canal as soon as the lease of the bar barani lands terminated any rights they may have had terminated also.
- II. That the proprietary rights were in the hands of the Government, who did not confer them on Ghulam Kadir by the sanad of 1886, and that Ghulam Kadir by accepting the sanad after the Financial Commissioner's reply to his petition of the 7th July 1885, "accepted the position, and admitted that there were no further rights beyond those detailed in the sanad, and that outside the grant he had no proprietary right," and waived all claims in consideration of the gift of the land.

111. That on the true construction of paragraph 8 of the sanad, the Defendant 1 was "entitled to take into his own hands through his subordinate officers, at his pleasure, all the powers which were exercisable by the Plaintiffs in the Hajiwah canal," and dismissed the suit with costs.

An appeal to the Chief Court of the Punjab was also dismissed on the 24th January 1898. The Judges of that Court held:

- (1) That by the sanction originally given to construct a canal, all that was granted to Ghulam Mustafa Khan was permission to make a canal for the purposes of his lease, and that in the event of that lease not being renewed on its expiry his rights in the canal would lapse with the lease.
- (2) That the position taken up by Government in the letter of the 17th November 1890, was consistent with the deed of 1886 and with the letter of the Financial Commissioner of the 3rd August 1885, and that Ghulam Kadir Khan's signature of the deed without amendment establishes the intention of the parties to have been as now contended for by the Government.
- (3) That the Plaintiffs were not entitled to any relief even with regard to such rights as they were now admitted by Defendant to possess.

It was submitted that having regard to the enormous expense incurred by the Plaintiffs' grandfather and father in constructing the canal in question, amounting to 9 lakhs of rupees, and to the rights in the land of the canal and the water conveyed in the canal previous to the grant, to the arrangements made with several proprietors of the villages over whose land the canal passes, it is unreasonable to suppose that Plaintiffs could have intended by clause 8 of the deed in question to concede to the Government the power at its will to deprive them of those valuable rights merely in consideration of the grant of waste lands, which might at any time be rendered valueless by the Government assuming the exercise of this power and fixing a water rate which might leave the Plaintiffs no margin of profit. The title of the Government was questioned on behalf of the Appellants as regards the canal.

Mr. Mayne, Mr. C. W. Arathoon, Mr. Degruyther and Mr. A. K. Khan for the Appellants.

Mr. Arthur Cohen, K. C., and Mr. Branson for the Respondent.

The case was argued on 20th, 21st February and on the 6th March, and judgment was reserved.

REPORTS (See Index.)

VERY UNUSUAL PROCEDURE SEEMS TO HAVE BEEN adopted by the High Court in the case of Empress v. Sadak Ali and others, popularly known as the Noakhally murder case. We have not been able to find any precedent for remanding a capital sentence case for retrial by the Court below when the High Court had a complete record and considered the whole of the evidence before it. The order of remand is all the more remarkable as it has reference to only one of several co-accused whose offence arises out of one and the same transaction, and the evidence on record has a bearing on the whole case. We could have understood the order if the remand had been under sec. 375 of the Code of Criminal Procedure for the purpose of further enquiry or for taking additional evidence. No doubt, sec. 376 gives the High Court the power to order a new trial on the same charge. But if a retrial was ordered under that section it is a matter of ordinary judicial fairness that the remanding Court should not comment on the evidence or express any opinion as to the credibility of any particular witness or witnesses.

If it is not tolerated by the law that publicists should make any comments on a pending case lest there should be prejudice in the trial, on what principle is it to be justified that an Appellate Court should remand a case for retrial with findings as to who is to be relied on, and who not, and what inferences arise from the evidence recorded in the previous trial. It is manifestly placing a subordinate Court and the assessors, in an almost impossible position, namely, to arrive at any independent finding.

The order and directions of the remanding Court transgress the fundamental principles of judicial trial in another respect. A very material issue in the case is whether the Police had placed obstacles in the way of a proper judicial enquiry into it and whether a certain police-officer had perjured himself during the trial and attempted to pass off a certain forged document as genuine. We cannot comprehend how a Court not finally disposing of the case but remanding it, as against the principal accused, for a new trial, can record any finding with regard to such issues. Still this is what the learned judges have done. This seems all the more unfortunate as certain Rules in connection with those issues are still pending before the same Court.

The Court has thus in sending the case for retrial, not only anticipated the functions of the lower Court, but has also rendered itself incompetent to sit as an Appellate Court in any proceedings connected with this case. We have every confidence that the learned Chief Justice will take steps to ensure a proper judicial enquiry into the whole case rather than allow this remand judgment to throttle it, so far at least as the conduct of the Police is concerned. The proper course for the High Court in this case, in our humble opinion, would have been to maintain a judicial unconcern with regard to the irrelevant matters in the Sessions Judge's judgment until the hearing and then, after censuring Mr. Pennell for the impropriety of his language and for the introduction of irrelevant matters in his judgment, to proceed to dispose of the whole case on the record before it or to remand the same for retrial on the ground of bias of the judge or prejudice to the accused, if their Lordships were of that opinion.

The following extract from remand judgment shows clearly that their Lordships were not altogether unconscious of the possibility of influencing the lower Court upon the retrial :—

"In view of the course which we propose to take, so far as Sadak is concerned, we do not wish to express, nor would it be expedient or right that we should express any opinion on the facts to which we have referred. But we think we are entitled to explain the conclusion to which the general evidence has led us as to the time when and the circumstances under which this crime appears to have been committed, &c., &c."

We see no justification for what follows and hardly any for what precedes the above. The truth or otherwise of the whole case will have to be decided by the Court below, on what their Lordships call "the general evidence," and it does not seem right for their Lordships not only to pass on their own conjectures on a subordinate Court, but also to detach portions of this "general evidence" and mark out particular exhibits and stamp them as true or untrue. It is indeed very hard on the accused to be sent for retrial before a subordinate Court with the suggestions of a superior Court as to how and what he may be found guilty of. Had anything similar been done, at any other time, by any lower Court their Lordships would surely have quashed the judgment.

We commend the following portion of the judgment in the above case as laying down a very wholesome rule for the guidance of judicial officers.

"We desire to lay down emphatically for the information of the subordinate judiciary, that in a criminal trial there is one issue and one issue only for the determination of the Court, viz., the guilt or innocence of the person or persons accused. The high position of a judge, and the immunity with which the law surrounds his office and utterances, are based on the assumption that he forms his judgment upon a calm and dispassionate consideration of the facts before him, and gives expression to his views in a judicial spirit without importing into it personal feeling or personal bias. It would be intolerable if a judgment was to be made the vehicle for giving vent to individual grievances or personal animosity, or for the purpose of posing as a champion of public liberty. The introduction upon the record, against all rules of law and principles of evidence, of documents which have not the faintest bearing on or connection with the case which the Sessions Judge was trying, with the plain object of enabling him to ventilate his own grievances, real or fancied, and delivering a homily to the public upon the general wrong-doing of high-placed officials, has made a travesty of justice. The judgment in this case, in my opinion, and I say this with extreme regret, infringes every canon of judicial decorum and judicial propriety."

WE PROPOSED RESERVING OUR COMMENTS ON THE decision of the Judicial Committee in the case of Kalidas Mukerjee v. The East Indian Railway Company [2 C. W. N. 609 : 3 C. W. N. 781 : 5 C. W. N. cxxxii (131)] till we could report it in extenso. But having regard to the fact that our contemporaries in England are expressing an unqualified approval of the Privy Council view of the case, it is necessary to point out that the Judicial Committee have, according to our view, misconceived the case altogether. It is a practice with the Judicial Committee not to disturb the findings of facts of the lower Courts except under exceptional circumstances. But in this case their Lordships have apparently departed from that rule, and overruled the findings of the High Court on grounds, which have, to say the least, caused considerable surprise in India. The Lord Chancellor observes in his judgment that charcoal stoves are provided in third class railway compartments in this country for the convenience of passengers. This statement alone was sufficient for his Lordship's judgment being received with ridicule in India. The evidence upon which his Lordship has made that statement has been wholly misunderstood. No less remarkable is his Lordship's statement that bombs which are exploded in this country on festive occasions are of the size of cricket balls as also his findings that a consignment of fireworks intended for a Hindu marriage and accompanied by two men could be carried as small parcels or concealed in tin boxes or canvas bags, giving them the appearance of the usual personal luggage of third class passengers. It is in evidence that the consignment contained rockets, and it did not suggest to the Lord Chancellor that Indian rockets with three feet or more of their brittle tail made of jute sticks or split bamboos, were difficult to conceal. It will excite no less surprise that the English Lord Chancellor implicitly relied on the expert evidence that six of these bombs of the size of "cricket balls" and concealed as a small parcel caused all the havoc that the explosion, in this case, did. Expert evidence is generally at a considerable discount now-a-days and the judicial estimate of such evidence which we often get from across the seas also confirms this view. In this case the expert evidence was such that neither counsel or judge in this country ever considered it worth while to discuss it seriously. There was substantive evidence as to quantity of fireworks carried and the evidence given by the expert in this case as opposed to it was altogether laughable. It is well known that fireworks intended for marriage festivities are of a miscellaneous kind and ordinarily they are carried in large baskets. The explosion and its result abundantly showed that there must have been a very large quantity of fireworks. The report of an enquiry by the Railway Company showed that their servants were aware of such traffic in explosives by passenger trains. Their conduct showed that by the exercise of ordinary care and precaution they might have, as they really did afterwards, prevented such dangerous traffic. From such facts proved the Courts below came to the conclusion that the presumption of negligence on the part of Company's servants was so strong that it could only be rebutted by evidence. We do not understand how the dead man's father living over a thousand miles away was to bring home any evidence of the conduct of Railway servants in allowing fireworks to be taken into the carriage in which the deceased was travelling. Any one who has been in this country, knows how difficult it is for a third class passenger to carry any luggage free. The allowance being only 15 seers or about 28lbs, one would at once admit the difficulty of carrying a bundle of fireworks without the knowledge of the Railway servants who pass the luggage. The Lord Chancellor is somehow possessed with the idea that the Indian Judges have held that it is obligatory on the Railway servants to search the contents of personal-luggage carefully and it is on this account that the press in England agreeing with the Lord Chancellor have condemned the decision of the Courts below. The judges here only meant that when the bye-laws require and as a matter of fact Railway servants do pass luggage such a quantity of fireworks could not have been taken into the carriage without their connivance. If such cases had been tried by a jury in this country as they are in England, we are sure, they would have come precisely to the same conclusion as the learned judges did. The error into which the Lord Chancellor has fallen, both as to particular facts and the final conclusion has arisen from want of experience of things as they are in India. This case shows how necessary it is to have more judges with Indian experience on the Board.

This is what the Law Times says on the above case:—

Last week judgment was given by the Committee of the Privy Council in the case of the East Indian Railway Company v. Kalidas Mukerjee, which raised a question of general interest. The action was by a father to recover damages for the death of his son by the alleged negligence of the company. The lad was travelling in a smoking carriage into which two other passengers entered, bringing with them a number of bombs and fireworks intended for a Hindu wedding. The carriage had the usual small charcoal stove for the use of smokers, and by chance the fireworks caught fire, exploded, and all three occupants of the carriage were killed. Both the Indian tribunals condemned the company in 1,500 rupees damages and costs. The Lord Chancellor, in giving judgment reversing the decision of the Indian tribunals, said there was nothing in the size or appearance of the guilty articles to attract the attention of the officials, and there was no duty imposed on them to search every parcel a passenger took in with him into the railway carriage. Many of us have before now wished that the habit of travelling like the famous "Mrs. Brown," of Scratchley's inimitable creation, had died with her. But of the two evils, if the decision had been otherwise and railways had been compelled to institute an irksome examination of every parcel a passenger carried with him, the chance of a Guy Fawkes entertainment would be the lesser. In India everything that a native can by any possibility get into the carriage he carts in, and what he cannot stow away he sits upon. The importance of the decision to an Indian railway company is so immense, that one is not surprised they decided to appeal to this country rather than let such a decision stand on the record.

English Notes.

COURT OF APPEAL.—THE BRITISH MOTOR CAR SYNDICATE, LIMITED v. TAYLOR AND SONS, LIMITED. Before the LORD CHIEF JUSTICE, LORD JUSTICE RIGBY, and LORD JUSTICE WILLIAMS. 6th November 1900.

MINTER v. WILLIAMS (4 A. & F. 251) questioned.

The question in this case was whether purchasing in England articles which had been infringed and sending them to Paris to be disposed of did or did not constitute an infringement of the patent. The patent of the Plaintiffs which had been infringed was for starting gas motor engines. That patent was infringed by Messrs. Richter and Green and the Plaintiff Motor Company had obtained a judgment against them for such infringement. The patent of Plaintiffs conferred on them the usual privilege for 14 years within the United Kingdom and prohibited others from "either directly or indirectly making using or putting into practice the invention or part of same."

The Defendants had in good faith purchased 27 starters from Messrs. Richter and Green prior to Plaintiffs' judgment against that firm. Nineteen of such starters they had sent off to Paris to be sold; and their branch there sold these to foreign firms. Plaintiffs, the Motor Company, not being able to obtain satisfaction on their judgment from Richter and Green, now sued the Defendants for damages for infringing their patent. Defendants denied liability quoad these 19 starters.

MR. JUSTICE STIRLING had held that they were liable and assessed £5 damages on each of the 27 starters. The present appeal was by the Defendants from such decision of Mr. Justice Stirling.

The Appeal Court supported that decision. A case of acquisition for trade purposes had been made out. In fact a sale in this country of eight of them had been proved, which showed that the purchases of the whole lot were made for profit. A user of them was established (Orley v. Hobden, 8 C. B. N. S. 686). As regards the measure of damages the view expressed in The Pneumatic Tyre Co. v. Puncture Proof Co. (16 P. R. 209) was adopted. The amount was rightly assessed by Mr. Justice Stirling as damages actually sustained by Plaintiffs.

MR. BOWFIELD, Q. C., and MR. LANE in support of the Appeal.

COURT OF APPEAL.—WATTS v. DRISCOLL and WATTS. Before the LORD CHIEF JUSTICE, LORD JUSTICE RIGBY and LORD JUSTICE WILLIAMS. 30th November 1900.

Partnership Act, 1900—Rights of the mortgagee of the share of one partner.

In this case the Plaintiff was James Watts, the father of the Defendant Watts. James Watts was on terms of intimacy with the Defendant Driscoll, a fishmonger, carrying on his business in London in order to get his son into that business; during the latter part of the year 1898, Plaintiff agreed to purchase from Driscoll for the use and benefit of his son, the Defendant, one-half share in the partnership business for £1,500. In accordance with the terms of the purchase the two Defendants became partners in the business. The articles of partnership were executed dated the 9th January 1899. Thereupon the Defendant Watts, on March 1899, assigned to his father all his partnership interest, etc., to secure the advance. The two Defendants could not satisfactorily work together and in about five months after they had become partners, Defendant Watts sold his interest in the concern to Driscoll for £500 and a deed of dissolution was carried out. This matter was done unknown to the Plaintiff Watts. It was found by the learned Judge, Mr. Justice Farwell, who originally tried the action, that the Defendant Driscoll knew that the Defendant Watts had entered into the business in consequence of advances made by the father, and had given to the father an assignment of his interest in the partnership and that the son, Defendant Watts, had no money of his own.

Plaintiff now claimed a declaration that he was entitled to a charge upon the share of his son in the partnership assets and claimed all proper and necessary accounts. He succeeded before that learned Judge.

On this appeal by the Defendant Driscoll the Court of Appeal, on a consideration of the Partnership Act, 1890, with particular reference to sec. 31 thereof, held that the mortgagee was entitled to the account which he claimed and dismissed the appeal.

CHANCERY DIVISION.—THE HOME and COLONIAL STORES v. COLLS. Before MR. JUSTICE JOYCE. 21st December 1900.

Obstruction of ancient lights—Ordinary and extraordinary amount of light.

WARREN v. BROWN (1900, 2 Q. B. 722) followed.

The abovenamed company sought an injunction to prohibit the erection by Defendant of a building to a height of 42 feet in the place of one taken down which stood under 20 feet in height. The site is in Worship Street, No. 44, in the City of London. Plaintiff complained that by such erection injury would be caused to his ancient lights to his premises adjoining. The learned Judge in his judgment entered into an explanation of the situation of the premises, of the litigants, of the height of the neighbouring buildings, of the position of the rooms where injury was apprehended, the mode in which they were lighted previously, and observed that there was no evidence to support Plaintiff's case that an extraordinary amount of light from the Worship Street windows had been enjoyed for anything like the period of 20 years; it was most likely that Plaintiff's premises had undergone reconstruction recently. From the evidence of expert witnesses, it would appear that the proposed edifice would not affect the letting or selling value of Plaintiff's premises; at the height of 42ft. it would not be high enough to reach any line drawn at an angle of 45 degrees to the horizon from any point in the base of the third and fourth windows on the ground floor of Plaintiff's buildings which are the windows, if any, that are most likely to have diminished light. No doubt Defendant's building of 36ft. width directly south of those windows would cut off a portion of the sky which is now visible from within Plaintiff's office and to some extent render the use of artificial lights necessary more frequently, but considering all these it was clear that Plaintiff's building after the proposed erection would still be well and sufficiently lighted for all ordinary purposes of occupancy as an office or place of business. It was impossible to reconcile all the authorities quoted. The case of Warren v. Brown, the most recent pronouncement, should govern the present case. The action failed.

Mr. Eady, Q. C., and Mr. Vernon for the Plaintiffs

Mr. Bray, Q. C., and Mr. Nutter for the Defendant.

Suit dismissed with costs.

C. W. A.

QUEEN'S BENCH DIVISION.—HANSON v. WALLER. Before MR. JUSTICE KENNEDY and MR. JUSTICE DARLING. 18th December 1900.

False imprisonment—Manager acting within the scope of his authority in causing arrest—Implied authority.

The Defendant was the proprietor of a public house, and the Plaintiff, a barman, was in his employ. Defendant used to visit the public house daily but he left the management of it in the hands of one Moseley. On one occasion Moseley went down to the cellar and believing that Plaintiff was running whiskey from the cellar into a cart and so stealing it, gave him in charge. On the way to the police-station, Moseley discovered that he had made a mistake; he withdrew the charge of stealing and Plaintiff was at once released.

Plaintiff's claim for false imprisonment against Defendant was nonsuited by the County Court Judge of Marylebone on the ground that there was no evidence that the manager was acting within the scope of his authority in causing the arrest. On this appeal by Plaintiff the Court relying on the case of Jones v. Duck, decided by the Court of Appeal (see the Times of 16th March 1900) where it is said:—"A servant had implied authority to give a person into custody if it was necessary to do so in order to protect his master's property. The cases also showed that a servant might have such implied authority derived from the exigency of the particular occasion."

Held—That there was no evidence in this case sufficient to present a case which might succeed against the Defendant. It was not within the sphere of the duty of a public house manager to arrest people, nor had he any particular duty to decide whether to arrest. There was no case of exigency either, there was no whiskey which could be saved by a prompt arrest to justify the action. The arrest was not for the necessary protection of the master's property. Moreover Moseley had ample opportunity of consulting the Defendant, so that there was not even any element which rendered it reasonably necessary to cause the arrest without the employer's previous consent. The learned Judges also relied on the Privy Council decision of Bank of New South Wales v. Owston (4 App. Cas., p. 270), in dismissing the appeal.

QUEEN'S BENCH DIVISION.—TROTT v. NATIONAL DISCOUNT COMPANY. Before MR. JUSTICE KENNEDY. 12th November 1900.

THE BRITISH MUTUAL BANK v. CHARNWOOD FOREST RAILWAY (18 Q. B. D. 714) distinguished.

One Staden was acting as an assistant secretary in the Defendant company's office. A part of the company's ordinary business was to transact investments in the various British and Foreign securities. The Plaintiff was a clerk in the city and was acquainted with Staden. On the latter's suggestion he handed over £300 to him for the purpose of being invested on the purchase of 30, £10 shares of the Defendant company. Staden did not do so but absconded with the £300. The Plaintiff brought this action against the Defendant company for the money so made over to Staden to invest in the said shares. The question was whether the company was liable to make good the loss so caused. The learned Judge held that the company was liable. He was of opinion that if Staden had not actual authority he was clothed with apparent authority. In this matter Staden was doing what he had, as a matter of practice, done before in the Defendant's office. He held that when the money was paid by Plaintiff to Staden, it was payment to the Defendant company. It was paid expressly for the principal, and the mere fact that Staden as the agent when he received the cash meant to misappropriate it did not exonerate the Defendant company. The above noted case was distinguishable.

PRIVY COUNCIL.

[APPEAL FROM THE SUPREME COURT OF CEYLON.]

LORD MACNAGHTEN.

LORD DAVEY.

LORD ROBERTSON.

LORD LINDLEY.

SIR FORD NORTH.

1901.

23, March.

PERRERA

v.

PERRERA.

Will—Sound disposing mind—Will prepared under instructions.

Two questions were raised in this appeal: (1) Was the document propounded as the Will of Abraham Perrerá properly executed according to the law of Ceylon? (2) Was the testator of sound disposing mind when he signed that document?

Upon the first point Appellant's counsel referred to Ordinance 7 of 1834, sec. 2, as the first legislation, also to the later Ordinance 7 of 1840, sec. 3, which was in the following terms:—No Will should be valid, unless the signature of the testator was made or acknowledged by the testator, in the presence of a licensed notary public and two or more witnesses, who shall be present at the same time and duly attest such execution; or if "no notary shall be present" then the testator's acknowledgment was to be in the presence of five or more witnesses. No form of attestation was necessary.

The Will was acknowledged by the testator and his mark placed on it in the presence of five witnesses who deposed to the fact that the licensed notary Goonarātne was present at the time, but had declined to attest it for fear of displeasing a wealthy client of his; that Goonarātne had drawn the Will on the testator's instructions and at his suggestion and the testator had executed it before the five witnesses. He had also explained to the testator his position, owing to his said wealthy client's threat who was inimical to the Will.

The dispute arose on the words in the said ordinance "if no notary shall be present."

For the Appellant it was contended that he was not merely physically present but was present to see to its proper execution and acted as notary to the last; consequently as it was not attested by him the Will was not duly executed.

Their Lordships concurred with the majority of the Ceylon Court, that those words implied, if no notary shall be present "acting in his notarial capacity."

They say "Mr. Mayne in his able argument did not contend that the mere bodily presence of a notary would vitiate the execution of a Will attested by five witnesses. He admitted that if a notary were drunk or asleep or mentally incapacitated he would not be present within the meaning of the Ordinance. But he contended that in this case the notary was not only present but acting in a notarial capacity up to the very last moment, when, as he argued, it was too late for him to stand aside or retire from his position. Their Lordships have some difficulty in following that argument, when the view of the minority of the Court of Ceylon that mere bodily presence of a notary who did not attest, vitiated the attestation of the five witnesses required by law, was abandoned; it was difficult to see any sound distinction between the case of a notary who was present but incapable of performing his notarial duties, and the case of a notary who was present and refused for some reason or other to perform those duties. Nor is it easy to see what difference it made whether the notary who was present refused to perform his notarial duties at the last moment or had refused at some earlier time to act on the occasion in his notarial capacity."

Upon the question whether the testator was of sound mind their Lordships held, that having regard to all the circumstances of the case the diagnosis of Drs. Poneska and Rockwood who were not present at the execution of the Will ought not to outweigh and prevail over the testimony of eye-witnesses based upon the evidence of their own senses. Mr. Mayne had adopted the argument of the minority of the Court below, that it was not enough to prove that the testator was of sound mind when he gave instructions for his Will and that the document drawn in pursuance of such instructions was signed by him as his Will, if it was not shown that he was capable of understanding its provisions at the time of signing.

On this argument their Lordships state that that was not the law and referred to Parkar v. Felgate (8 P. D. 171) where Sir James Hannen had laid down the law correctly in saying:—(p. 173) "If a person has given instructions to a solicitor to make a Will and the solicitor prepares it in accordance with such instructions, all that is necessary to make it a good Will if executed by the testator is that he should be able to think thus far:—'I give my solicitor instructions to prepare making a certain disposition of my property. I have no doubt that he has given effect to my intention and I accept the document put before me as carrying it out.'"

Mr. Mayne and Mr. P. Cassel for the Appellants.

No one appeared for the Respondents.

AJUM GOOLAM HOSSEIN & Co.,
and HAJEE CASEM JOOSUB,
v.

THE UNION MARINE
INSURANCE COMPANY.

Marine insurance—Underwriters—Burden of proving unseaworthiness of ship—Risk of loss from unascertainable causes—Presumption of unseaworthiness.

The action was brought on four policies of insurance on cargoes shipped on board the steamship Taif to be carried from Port Louis in Mauritius to Bombay. The underwriters defended the action on the ground that she was unseaworthy when she left the port of St. Louis. The sole question in the appeal was whether they had proved, the onus being on them, that their contention was sound.

The Supreme Court of Mauritius by a majority had decided that the underwriters had proved the unseaworthiness of the vessel, the Chief Justice dissenting.

In their Lordships' judgment, it is conceded that the undoubted fact that the Tuif capsized and sank in less than 24 hours after quitting St. Louis without encountering any storm or other known cause to account for the catastrophe, gave the underwriters great advantage, for if nothing more was known they should succeed in the action. The natural inference would be that the ship was unseaworthy. In such case a jury should be directed to act on such presumption. The question then was, were other facts material to the enquiry as to the seaworthiness of the ship proved? Such facts must be weighed against the unaccountable loss of the ship, and unless the balance of the evidence warranted the conclusion that the ship was unseaworthy when she left port, such unseaworthiness could not be properly treated as established, with the consequence that the defence would fail. The danger and error of acting on presumption in favour of unseaworthiness was pointed out in Pickup v. Thames Mersey Marine Insurance Co. (3 Q. B. D. 594) and Anderson v. Morrice (L. R. 10 C. P. 58).

Then after considering a great mass of evidence produced in the case by the parties in support of their theories, and referring to Steel v. The State Line Steamship Co. (L. R. 3 Ap. Cas. 12) in support of the statement that a ship ought not to be treated as unseaworthy by reason of something objectionable, but easily curable by those on board, their Lordships say that this case was one of some difficulty, and it was not surprising that the underwriters defended it, but the evidence disclosed that they were forced from one theory into another as regards the unseaworthiness and they have failed to prove their case. The result was that all was conjecture, the real cause of the loss was unknown and could not be ascertained from the evidence adduced. "But underwriters took the risk of loss from unascertainable causes; and after carefully weighing all the evidence and bearing in mind the presumption of unseaworthiness on which the underwriters relied, their Lordships had come to the conclusion that unseaworthiness at the time of sailing was not proved." His Majesty would be recommended that the appeal should succeed.

Mr. Joseph Walton, K. C., Mr. Horridge, K. C., and Mr. Bateson for the Respondents.

[APPEAL FROM THE ALLAHABAD HIGH COURT.]

LORD HOBHOUSE.

LORD MACNAGHTEN.

LORD DAVEY.

LORD ROBERTSON.

LORD LINDLEY.

SIR FORD NORTH.

1901.

23, March.

RAJA BALWANT SINGH

THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA.

Special leave to appeal—Limitation—Suit for refund Limitation Act, Art. 14.

The Petitioner, Raja Balwant Singh, in his petition stated that he filed a plaint in the Sub-Judge's Court at Agra and therein stated that as zemindar of the two villages, Kaitha and Gangui, he was liable to pay the irrigation rate levied on properties in the said village in respect of land, which being entered as unirrigated at the time of the last settlement, had since been irrigated by means of canals.

From Fasli 1292 to 1296 sums amounting to Rs. 4,543 were erroneously levied upon the proprietors and repaid by Petitioner as irrigation rates payable in respect of lands which at the time of settlement were irrigated by canal or well water or otherwise.

Petitioner discovered this mistake on 13th May 1891 and an application for refund was made on the 14th May and was rejected on the 1st August 1891 by the Collector.

The Respondent in his written statement, so far as is material to this application, set up that the suit was barred by limitation, which question was raised as an issue.

On the 6th August 1896 the Sub-Judge dismissed the suit as barred by limitation. As regarded the cause of action alleged to arise from the said order refusing a refund of 1st August 1891, he considered that it was barred by Art. 14 of the Limitation Act.

If the monies claimed had been paid under a mistake which was for the first time discovered on the 13th May 1891, he thought that the case would be governed by Art. 96, and not by Art. 16 and that the suit would be in time. After examining the evidence on this point, the Sub-Judge recorded the following opinion:—

"In short I find from the evidence of Har Pershad that he discovered the mistake more than three years before the institution of this suit, and I further find from the evidence of Peara Lal that Raja Baldeo Singh and Balwant Singh were informed of the excess payment."

Against such decision Petitioner appealed to the District Judge of Agra, who confirmed the decree dismissing the suit, though he differed from the Subordinate Judge on the grounds for so doing. In his judgment, dated 21st December 1896, he states:—

"There is no reservation in Art. 14 such as is contended for by Appellant. The order of the Collector was passed in his official capacity after enquiry had been made; if the present claim were to be decreed, that order would in effect be set aside and unless the claim is decreed the order will remain valid. The suit therefore is in effect one to set aside the Collector's order and it cannot, it may be said, be withdrawn from the category of such suits by being described in another way. I was inclined at first to think that Art. 14 did not apply, but on fuller consideration I have come to the conclusion that the suit should be dismissed as not having been brought within one year from the order of the Collector dated 1st August 1891."

He then proceeded to consider the case as affected by Art. 96 and differing as to the credibility of witnesses concluded as follows:—

"I think it may fairly be held that the mistake in question was only definitely discovered, that is, made certain, on the day before the application was presented to the Collector; on this finding of fact if Art. 96 applies to this case, the suit was within time and the appeal should be allowed but, as above stated, I am of opinion that Art. 14 should be applied and the appeal fails."

Petitioner appealed next to the Allahabad High Court which (Justices Blair and Burkill) on 12th December 1899 dismissed the appeal finding as follows:—

"In our opinion the suit does not lie by dint of sec. 241, 2nd para. of cl. (1) of the Land Revenue Act, XIX of 1873, and sec. 45 of Act VIII of 1873. This question was not raised in the appeal or indeed elsewhere at all. The Court below dismissed the suit by application of Art. 14 of the Limitation Act."

Petitioner's application for leave to appeal to Her Majesty in Council was refused on the 23rd March 1900, the High Court (The Chief Justice and Justice Banerjee) being of opinion that it was not shown that the amount at stake exceeded the amount claimed Rs. 4,543 and because a proper construction had been placed on the provisions of sec. 241 (2) of Act VIII of 1873. "Having regard to sec. 45 we think that the owner's rate in question in the suit was within the meaning of the later Act a sum which was realizable as revenue. We do not think there is sufficient doubt in the matter to make the question involved a substantial question of law."

Mr. Mayne for the Petitioner referred to the several sections of the Limitation Act and to the said Land Revenue Acts, and urged that the Courts in India had erred in law inasmuch as the liability contended against in the present suit was a recurring liability, the amount in dispute was really much beyond the appealable amount, and the questions raised were difficult questions of law.

THEIR LORDSHIPS granted leave to appeal on the usual terms.

C. W. A.

Leave granted.

CALCUTTA HIGH COURT.

[ORDINARY ORIGINAL CIVIL JURISDICTION.]

HARINGTON, J. } DWARKA NATH ADDY
1901. }
15, April. } BHAGGABUTTY CHURN SEAL.

Enlargement of time for delivery of an award.

Under an order of Court, dated 23rd May 1893, all matters in dispute in this suit were referred to the decision of certain arbitrators. The time for the submission of their award to the Court was limited by that order to three months from the date of service on them of an office copy of the order or such further time as they might allow themselves by endorsement on the order to that effect. The arbitrators made and submitted their award on 1st April 1898, but as they had not determined some of the matters referred to them the award was remitted for their reconsideration. Subsequently the time for the completion of the award was extended on several occasions by the arbitrators and by the last endorsement made by them on an office copy of the order the arbitrators allowed themselves time till the 31st January 1901. On that date they signed their award but through an oversight they failed to forward it to the Registrar for the purpose of having it filed in Court. On the following day however they sent it to the Registrar. The Registrar refused to accept it as it was out of time. Under these circumstances Mr. Bagram moved, on notice, for extension of time on behalf of the Defendant and relied on an affidavit sworn by the arbitrators setting out the above circumstances. The Court desired to be satisfied that there was authority for the proposition that an application for an extension of the period for making an award may be granted when made after the expiry of that period.

Mr. Bagram.—The arbitrators had completed all acts of a judicial character. The award was not completed as the making of an award includes its delivery. Had the award been completed the application would have been too late, according to a decision of the Privy Council reported in Raja Har Narain v. Chaudhrani Bhugwant Kuar (L. R. 18 I. A. 55). If this application be held to be too late it would be impossible to invoke the aid of sec. 514 of the Code of Civil Procedure under circumstances similar to these. An order for extension may be made after expiry of the period for making an award. Har Narain v. Bhugwant Kuar (I. L. R. 10 All. 137), Umernay Premji v. Shamji Kanji (I. L. R. 13 Bom. 119).

THE COURT.—You may have your order on the authority of the Bombay case.

Messrs. Gregory & Jones, Attorneys for the applicants.

REPORTS (See Index.)

WE WELCOME THE ANNUAL STATEMENT OF THE Bar Council. We shall feel greatly indebted to this vigilant guardian of the interests of the Bar if it succeed in reducing the unwritten rules of professional etiquette into writing.

SOME OF THE RULES SETTLED UPON BY THE COUNCIL during the past year are of limited operation in India as they relate mostly to King's Counsel. There seems to be some unwritten rule with the Government at home never to honour any counsel practising in India with the silk gown. But still juniors will be interested to learn that the Bar Council has decided that in all ordinary cases the brief fee of a junior should be two-thirds or three-fifths of the fee of the K. C. who leads him. Another interesting rule, for which we have hardly any necessity in this country, is that members of the Bar ought not to furnish signed photographs of themselves for publication in legal newspapers.

THE FOLLOWING QUESTION WAS PUT TO THE BAR Council: Is a colonial Barrister, who is not, in addition, a member of the English Bar, entitled to appear before the Judicial Committee in any case from any colony, or only in a case from the colony to which he belongs? The Council very discreetly observes that it is doubtful whether he could claim such a right but it is improbable that he will be refused. It would be interesting to learn what answer the Bar Council will have to give if our friends, the vakils, would confront the Council with a similar question on the ground that they have as good a right as any to be heard in that one Court for the whole Empire.

A FULL REPORT OF THE PRIVY COUNCIL DECISION IN the case of Kulidas Mukerjee v. East India Railway Company will be found in this issue. It will appear that so far as their Lordships' findings on facts go, they fully justify our comments in the last number. But as regards their Lordships' exposition of the law is concerned, no exception to it can be taken. The liabilities of "common carriers" do not attach to Railway Companies. The law, however, requires that they should exercise every care and diligence in the carriage of passengers. But we think that the facts of the case will bear out that the Railway Company had prima facie failed to exercise even a reasonable amount of care and diligence. Had they done so, such extensive explosion could not have taken place. The theory of their having been carried in the form of third-class passengers' personal luggage is untenable. We know that bombs are nearer the size of foot-balls than that of cricket balls. It was in evidence that a list of fireworks was found on the person of one of the deceased which made mention of a very large quantity of them. The Company alleged that the bulk of them was carried by road on carts and that only samples of them were carried in the train, of which there was absolutely no evidence offered by the railway. Having regard to the extent of the explosion, the Courts here discredited this story and very rightly (see 2 C. W. N. 609 : 3 C. W. N. 781). If therefore a large quantity of fireworks was carried it is very unlikely that they could have been carried surreptitiously. When every ticket of third-class passengers is examined and all personal luggage passed at the ticket barrier by Railway servants, it is a very reasonable presumption that a large quantity of fireworks could not have been taken into the carriage without their connivance. Such was the common-sense view of the matter taken by the Courts below. If their Lordships mean that it was incumbent on the deceased lad's father, who lived far away, to adduce evidence as to the appearance or the dimensions of parcels as they were before explosion, it seems to us that it is requiring him to do an impossibility and to consult him on that ground is most unreasonable. While we accept their Lordships' law we regret that we cannot say as much as regards its application to the particular facts of the case.

The Times in a leading article makes the following observations on the above case:—

"No important case from India has recently come before the Privy Council. But a word may be said about that of 'The East Indian Railway Company v. Kalidas Mukerjee,' an appeal from the High Court at Calcutta. The father of a boy, who had been killed in an explosion in a third-class compartment on his journey between Secunderabad and Dheri, sought to recover damages. The Railway Company had nothing to do with the explosion that was caused by bombs, which two passengers with fireworks, intended for use at a Hindu wedding, had surreptitiously brought into the compartment. Apparently acting under a complete misapprehension as to the liability of a Railway Company in respect of the conveyance of passengers, the Courts below, without any evidence of negligence by the Company, held that the Plaintiff was entitled to recover—a decision which has been unhesitatingly set aside. Such a decision creates distrust and uneasiness. It prompts curiosity as to the strange things in the way of home-made justice, which might come to light if access to the Judicial Committee were easy and cheap."

It is unfortunate that the Times should have selected this case for such observations.

Reviews.

THE TRANSFER OF PROPERTY IN BRITISH INDIA. By H. S. Gour, M. A. (Cantab), Bar-at-Law: Calcutta, Thacker, Spink & Co.

Mr. Gour is to be congratulated on his analytical commentary on the Transfer of Property Act. He has evidently spared no pains to make his work useful to the profession, while the special requirements of the student, trying to master the intricacies of the law relating to Real Property in India, have not been lost sight of. The arrangement which the learned author has adopted is clear and simple, and the treatment of the various subjects condensed in the few short sections of the Act is extremely methodical. The annotations on the subjects of notice and lis pendens may no doubt have been made fuller in detail, but it is satisfactory to observe that the subdivisions of the subject have been discussed with great care. In one place, however, it strikes us that the import of the cases decided by the different High Courts in India, has not been very well brought out. We refer to the conflicting rulings of the various High Courts as to who are necessary parties in a mortgage suit under sec. 85. The learned author has added an elaborate introduction dealing with the origin of the idea of property, and the usefulness of the book has been enhanced by a carefully-prepared Index.

The Transfer of Property Act has been looked upon as one of the monsters of legislative production in this country. Its provisions are in places singularly full, and in others, deficient and wanting. In some matters it has imposed burdens unsuitable to the country, and in others it has neglected to provide necessary safeguards. Since the Act was first passed, it has had to be twice amended. Of the original draft only five sections remained after it passed through various Select Committees; and when finally passed into law, it was stated that endeavours had been made to render it capable of easy administration by "non-professional judges." It is admittedly fragmentary in character, and at the very outset of it one is struck by the singularity of the fact that the term "Immoveable property" has a negative definition. We are therefore very thankful to Mr. Gour for his learned notes on the subject, and we have no hesitation in saying that it is one of the best legal works we have had the good fortune of coming across in this country.

The get-up of the book is very commendable.

THE PRINCIPLES OF BUDDHIST LAW. By Chantoon of the Middle Temple, Bar-at-Law. Holder of the Inns of Court Studentship, 1888. Law Lecturer of the Rangoon College. Published by Myles Standish & Co., Rangoon.

On this side of India we are hardly familiar with the Buddhist law and we welcome this little work which gives within a small compass all that is useful to know on the subject. The author complains of the indefinite character of the existing materials with which he had to deal, but we must congratulate him on the success of his attempt to bring them under well-defined and appropriate heads. The author has given us a translation of certain portions of the Manu Thara Shwe Myin, and also the leading cases on the subject. We hardly feel competent to deal with the subjects treated in the work, but so far as we are able to judge the author has dealt with them in a clear and thoroughly efficient manner.

SEABORNE'S LAW OF VENDORS AND PURCHASERS OF REAL PROPERTY. By W. Arnold Jolly, M. A., 5th edition, Butterworth & Co., 12 Bell Yard W. C., Law Publishers, 1901.

It is hardly necessary to say that this work has been found by the profession of much practical utility. The recent changes in the law of descent and transfer of land and the large number of decisions bearing on the subject have been carefully dealt with. In this edition we find the author has changed the arrangement of the subjects owing to certain suggestions made by his critics, beginning with the law on the subject of "contract of sale." The book will be found to be a very valuable addition to one's Law Library.

AN EPITOME OF ROMAN LAW. By W. H. Hastings Kelke, M. A., of Lincoln's Inn, Bar-at-Law. Published by Sweet and Maxwell, Limited, 3 Chancery Lane, London. 1901.

This is an Introduction to Roman Private Law and gives within a small compass a great deal of information, and is not wanting in detail. The author has given us a short history of the development of the law and an intelligent classification of the subject, which should be of great assistance to the student. The chapter dealing with contracts has been put upon a chronological basis and those dealing with procedure and the meanings of certain words and phrases in common use are particularly helpful.

PERSONAL PROPERTY LAW. By W. H. Hastings, Kelke, M. A., of Lincoln's Inn, Barr-at-Law. Published by Sweet and Maxwell, Limited, 3 Chancery Lane, London. 1901.

This is also a student's handbook and is intended as a supplement to the author's "Epitome of Real Property Law." One of the most useful portions of the book is where specimens of certain instruments in full or in shortened form have been given. The subject has been clearly dealt with, and care has been taken to preserve the distinction between the law so far as it deals with property and contracts.

26, April.		v.
		RAI NANDA LAL BOSE, Decree-holder, Opposite Party.

Stay of execution of a decree pending the hearing of an appeal against an order in the execution case—Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882), sec. 244, ci. (c) and 545—Appeal not pending against the decree which is being executed.

In a suit for partition (Suit No. 115 of 1889) in the Court of the Second Subordinate Judge of 24-Pergunnahs, a sum of Rs. 24,000 was decreed to be paid by the Petitioner to the opposite party by way of owelty, in certain instalments. The Petitioner paid Rs. 22,000 and the opposite party took out execution for the balance Rs. 2,000 together with interest. The Petitioner objected on the grounds, inter alia, that the decree sought to be executed was set aside and rendered nugatory on the ground of fraud by a decree passed by the Original Side of the High Court in Suit No. 311 of 1898 between the same parties and as such, the decree was incapable of execution. The Court executing the decree overruled this objection and allowed execution to proceed.

Against this order, the judgment-debtor, Petitioner, preferred an appeal to the High Court which is still pending in this Court and pending the hearing of the said appeal he moved this Court and obtained this rule calling upon the opposite party to show cause why execution of the decree should not be stayed until the disposal of the appeal by the High Court upon the Petitioner's furnishing adequate security.

In showing cause, the opposite party contended, inter alia, that as there was no appeal pending in this Court against the decree sought to be executed, this Court had no jurisdiction to stay execution thereof under sec. 545, C. P. C.

He'd—That the High Court had jurisdiction to pass an order for stay of execution pending the hearing of the appeal.

APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE

No. 446 of 1899.

RAMPINI, J.	}	MOHUNT SANESH DAS, Defendant,
GUPTA, J.		1st party, Appellant,
1901.		v.
26, April.		RAM PERTAB SINGH, Plaintiff, and anr., Defendants, Respondents.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885)—Landlord and tenant—Occupancy holding, transferability of—Custom—Recognition by landlord with respect to a portion of the holding.

The suit, out of which the present appeal arose, was one brought by the Plaintiff to establish his right to 6 bighas and odd cottahs of land. The allegations of the Plaintiff material to this report were that Plaintiff purchased the lands at an execution sale in the benami of Ram Bilash Singh who subsequently executed a deed of relinquishment in favour of the Plaintiff on the 27th December 1886; that in a settlement proceeding the Settlement Officer entered 3 bighas 1 cottah 1 d. of land in the name of the Plaintiff and the remainder of the land in the name of Defendant No. 2 who had no title thereto. The Plaintiff thereupon brought the present suit.

The defence of Defendant No. 1 who was the landlord was mainly that occupancy right was not transferable by village custom. The Courts below held that as the Defendant No. 1, who was landlord, accepted the Plaintiff as his tenant with regard to a portion of the lands covered by the sale certificate, this was sufficient evidence to prove the custom of the transferability of tenancy rights in the village. The first Court gave the Plaintiff a decree for the declaration he sought and the lower Appellate Court also upheld the decree of the first Court.

Defendant No. 1, the landlord, preferred this second appeal.

On behalf of Plaintiff-Respondent it was, amongst other matters, contended that inasmuch as the Defendant No. 1 relied on the settlement provided in the deed of release executed by the Plaintiff's benamdar in his favour, this should be held to amount to a recognition of his right as tenant to the entire land of 6 bighas and odd.

Held—That the recognition of the Plaintiff by the landlord as tenant to a portion of the holding is not sufficient to prove the custom of transferability.

That the landlord is at liberty to recognise the purchaser of a holding to such an extent as he pleases, and because he admitted the Plaintiff to be a tenant of 3 bighas and odd it does not follow that he recognised him as tenant of 6 bighas and odd.

That there was no estoppel in this case inasmuch as the Plaintiff's purchase was not brought about by the admission made by the landlord, and the purchase was prior to this admission.

[The case was remanded to the lower Appellate Court for a fresh decision upon the question of custom as to transferability upon the evidence (if any) on the record].

Babu Nalini Ranjan Chatterjee for the Appellant.

Babu Shoroshi Charan Mitter for the Respondent.

APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE

NO. 24 OF 1899.

RAJ NARAYN, minor, by MUSST.

CHATRI KOER, Defendant No. 3,

Appellant,

v.

KHOBDARI RAI,

Plaintiff, Respondent.

RAMPINI, J.
GUPTA, J.
1901.
10, April.

Res judicata—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1877), sec. 13—Suit for declaration of title—Possession, proof of—Declaration in favour of Defendant, effect of, as against Co-defendants—Partition—Exchange—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), sec. 118.

This was an appeal preferred on the 3rd of January 1899, against the decree of Babu Behari Lal Mullick, Subordinate Judge of Sarun, dated the 17th September 1898, modifying the decree of Babu Prasanna Kumar Gupta, Munsif, 1st Court, of Chapra, dated the 23rd March 1898.

The suit out of which this appeal arose was brought by the Plaintiff for a declaration of his title to certain property and for confirmation of his possession therein. The Plaintiff claimed the whole of the property under the following titles, namely, one-half by right of inheritance from his father, one-eighth by exchange from the Defendants Nos. 4 to 6 and three eighths by right of inheritance from one Hamman.

The contesting Defendant was the Defendant No. 3, who traversed the whole of the Plaintiff's case and put him to proof of his title as well as of his possession.

The Court of first instance gave the Plaintiff a Decree.

The Subordinate Judge, on appeal, modified the first Court's decree and gave the Plaintiff a declaration of his right to  $\frac{3}{4}$ th of the property and a declaration of confirmation of possession to that extent.

The Defendant No. 3, the only contesting Defendant, preferred this appeal, and on his behalf it was urged, first that the declaration in favour of the Defendants Nos. 4 to 6 given by the lower Appellate Court was ultra vires, and, secondly, that the lower Appellate Court was wrong in holding that the exchange of the one-eighth share of the property said to have been effected between the Plaintiff and the Defendants Nos. 4 to 6 was valid on the ground of the transaction having been really a partition.

The Court in delivering judgment held :—

That where the Plaintiff and the Defendants were the joint owners of a certain property, but the Plaintiff alone was owner of another property, and the Defendants had no share in the latter, and by an oral arrangement, not reduced into writing, the Plaintiff alleged he got the former property in its entirety and the Defendants got their share in the latter the transaction cannot be regarded as a partition but is an exchange within the meaning of the Transfer of Property Act, and the transaction not being reduced into writing and registered was invalid under sec. 118 of the Act.

Gyanessa v. Mobarukunessa (I. L. R. 25 Cal. 210) distinguished.

That in a suit for declaration of title to property the Plaintiff must prove that title and cannot get a declaration merely on the ground of possession.

That the declaration of the lower Appellate Court in favour of the Plaintiff as against the Defendant-Appellant can alone be operative against him and that any declarations made in favour of other Defendants cannot bind the Defendant.

That there can be no res judicata between Co-defendants.

Babu Dwarka Nath Mitter for the Appellant.

Babu Surendra Nath Roy for the Respondent.

Decree modified

REPORTS (See Index.)

ON THE REOPENING OF THE HIGH COURT AFTER THE Mohurram vacation the following changes have taken place on the bench. Mr. Justice Ghose and Mr. Justice Taylor are sitting in the Criminal Revisional and Appellate Court, and Mr. Justice Ameer Ali and Mr. Justice Pratt are hearing civil appeals of the Burdwan Group. On the Original Side Mr. Justice Sale is presiding at the Calcutta Court of Criminal Sessions.

IT IS BELIEVED IN LEGAL CIRCLES IN ENGLAND THAT the present Lord Chancellor will before long retire from office, and in that event Lord Alverstone the present Lord Chief Justice will succeed to the woolsack.

WE HAVE OFTEN ALLUDED TO THE RELUCTANCE OF THE Courts in England and America to place much reliance on what is termed expert evidence. Our academic young contemporary of the Columbia University publishes in the March number of the Review a very interesting article on "Opinion Evidence." The article is thus summed up at its conclusion.

The consensus of judicial opinion is decidedly unfavorable with respect to the force or value of this species of evidence, and undoubtedly it is open in this respect to all the criticism that it has received from the courts. In many cases the witness, from causes that have been mentioned, becomes an interested partisan on the side of the case to which he owes his employment and is generally confronted with one equally interested on the other side. In the conflict of opinions that generally follows, the jury frequently find their way out of the difficulty by disregarding all evidence of this character. It is discredited from the beginning, largely in consequence of the means by which it has been obtained. It remains true, however, that if the abuses incident to the presentation of such evidence could be removed, the opinion of a capable and disinterested expert would frequently be of great value in the investigation of questions of fact. It would be much easier and wiser to root out these abuses than to dispense with this kind of evidence altogether.

Review.

THE CODE OF CRIMINAL PROCEDURE, BEING ACT V OF 1898, WITH A COMMENTARY AND NOTES. By Sir H. T. Prinsep, Kt. & Thacker, Spink & Co., Calcutta.

Familiar as Mr. Justice Prinsep's Code is to us, we would hardly recognise it as the same book which has been so well known during the last quarter of a century. Of the author's last edition, we did not hear much. That is, perhaps, because some very unfortunate errors crept into the text. But the author has now made complete amends for it by putting in the present edition a large amount of solid work. In this edition the author has treated his subject more in the manner of a commentary on the Code than as a mere classified digest. The Code of Criminal Procedure has never been regarded as a master-piece of legislation, and we cannot help admiring the candour of the author's observation that "in attempting to provide for almost every detail, the Code has become disjointed." When we remember the opportunities that had been given to the author for its consolidation in 1898, we cannot help noticing a sort of subdued humour running through his own remarks. But what the author had failed to do as a legislator, he has taken pains to fulfil as a commentator. The plan adopted by him is by appending an explanatory note to each section and to support it by authorities given in the foot-note. The advantage of this system of annotation is, that a reader often gets from it a far more clear grasp of the subject, than it is possible to obtain from the scrappy case-note form of annotation so commonly adopted for the elucidation of codified law. Advantageous as this method of annotation may be, from a student or jurist's point of view, the case-hunting lawyer will perhaps be slow to appreciate it. They ordinarily value an annotated edition by the facility it offers to find out some decisions to fit in with their cases. We cannot say that from a practical point of view they are altogether wrong. But still we are sure that a perusal of the author's annotations below each section would amply repay the trouble even to the busiest lawyer and that the commentaries will prove especially valuable to judicial officers. We find the Code noted up with most of the recent cases, either in the body of the book or in the addenda. But still we have noticed omissions. For instance, under sec. 438 we find no reference to Mr. Justice Prinsep's own decision in Kefatullah, 5 C. W. N. 71, to the effect that in sec. 145 proceedings when a District Judge is of opinion that they are defective in law, he may refer the case to the High Court and thus save the parties the trouble and expense of moving it themselves. Many cases under the old Code have also been omitted. With regard to some of these we would have preferred their being retained and distinguished with special reference to the amended law till they were declared obsolete from the Bench. References to unreported cases may be very valuable to practitioners in Calcutta but are not of much use to those who practise in the mofussil for the simple reason that they have no access to the judgments. Such references are, however, of great assistance to us and if we find any of them of special importance, we shall be happy to report them in these columns. The references given in the notes to the other sections, Acts, Rules and Orders, local or general, which have a bearing on the subject, also add considerably to the usefulness of the book. The thorough recasting of the notes on a new plan has, in our opinion, not in any way detracted from the intrinsic merits of this well-known work.

THE LAW OF BENAMI. By P. C. Sen. Price Re. 1. Messrs. Sen & Co., Kannaagar.

This little book contains the law relating to benami and fraudulent transactions. The important cases relating to the subject are all to be found arranged under their different heads. The book is divided into eight chapters, one of which relates to the right of the benamidars to sue; we have examined this chapter carefully and find that all the important cases have been referred to and the subject is treated in a manner which reflects credit on the author.

THE KAIYASTHA SAMACHAR: A monthly English Journal. Edited by Sachchidananda Sinha, Bar-at-Law.

The Kaiyastha community claims many eminent lawyers amongst its ranks and we are not surprised to find in the pages of their journal excellent reviews of law books and contributions of considerable merit dealing with such important subjects as the proposed restriction of civil appeals. It is, however, somewhat noticeable that many of these legal contributions proceed from Brahminical pens. But the editor himself hails from the Kaiyastha community, and his survey of the legal, social, political and literary world is highly interesting and instructive. The journal though not a legal one, yet being under the guidance of a lawyer, maintains a very healthy legal tone in its pages.

English Notes.

PROBATE COURT.—EDMONSON v. EDMONSON AND OTHERS. Before MR. JUSTICE BARNES. 28th March 1901.

Construction of Will—Contingency—Conditional Will.

This case relates to the proper meaning to be placed on the following clause in a Will. "In case I should not return home, owing to death, I hereby give and devise."

The Will was made by one Thomas G. Edmonson, on 23rd June 1871, when he was about to proceed to Norway. He was a resident of Caton in Lancashire. He returned to England in September 1871. In February 1876 he went on tour to Palestine whence he returned in the following month of May.

Prior to starting for Palestine he had sent the Will to his unmarried sister with a request that it should remain in the envelope unopened. The Will was found after his death in his said Caton residence in the envelope, the testator's desire being faithfully carried out by the Plaintiff, his said sister. It was kept in the deed-box to which the testator had daily access. In May 1900 the testator went to Scotland on a fishing tour and he suddenly died there. The Plaintiff, the said sister, claimed probate of the said Will. The Defendants resisted such claim on the ground that the Will was a conditional Will, effective only in case of the testator's death in Norway in 1871 and they asked for a declaration of intestacy.

The learned Judge gave a considered judgment. He referred to In the goods of Porter (L. R. 2 P. & M. 22) and In the goods of Spratt (13 the Times Law Reports 67) and he held that the Will was only made in contemplation of the trip to Norway in 1871 and was a conditional Will and consequently pronounced against it.

The parties had agreed that the costs should come out of the estate.

The judgment sets out the following passage from the judgment of Lord Penzance in the first of the two cases abovenamed:—

"It is a common feature of Wills in respect of which this sort of question arises that the testator therein refers to a possible impending calamity in connexion with his Will, and the question arises whether he intends to limit the operation of the Will to the time during which such calamity is imminent. If the language used by him can by any reasonable interpretation be construed to mean that he refers to the calamity and the period of time during which it may happen as the reason for making a Will, then the Will is not conditional; but if he refers to the calamity or the possible occurrence of some event as a reason for a certain disposition of his property, and mixes up the disposition of the property with the event so that it is dependent on the other, then the Court must hold the Will to be conditional."

Mr. Inderwick, K. C., and Mr. Priestly supported the Will.

Mr. Deane, K. C., and Mr. Willock for the Defendants against the Will.

Judgment for Defendants.

ADMIRALTY COURT.—THE TURRETT COURT. Before THE RIGHT HON'BLE THE PRESIDENT. 11th March 1901.

Costs—Taxation—Costs of transcript of short-hand writer's notes.

In a collision case between two steamships, the President had held the "Turrett Court" alone to blame. The action involved questions of an extremely technical character. For the Plaintiffs in that original action, who were the owners of a vessel called the Ramellies, a short-hand writer was employed who took down the evidence of experts, who dealt on the operation of steam-reducing valves and other such matters.

Those costs were disallowed by the Registrar to Plaintiff who had recovered judgment in that action with costs. The Registrar had refused them on the ground that such costs were only allowed when the successful party had applied for them at the hearing. The owners of the Ramellies appealed.

The learned President accepted the view of the Registrar; general costs do not include the costs of a short-hand writer's notes, these require a special direction. An application should be made at a time before the order is drawn up and he therefore directed that the taxation should stand.

Mr. Batten for the Plaintiff.

Mr. Stephen for the owners of the Turrett Court.

No. 357 of 1900.

MACLEAN, C. J.      SURJI KUMAR DUTT and another, BANERJEE, J.      Defendants, Judgment-debtors, 1901.

3, May.      AROON CHANDRA ROY and others,
Defendants, Decree-holders.

Limitation Act (XV of 1877), secs. 7, 8—Application by a minor jointly interested with other persons who attained majority.

* The facts of the case material to the report are as follows:—

The decree sought to be executed was passed in 1890; it directed Defendants-Judgment-debtors 12 and 13 to pay Rs. 831 to Defendants 1, 2 and 3 the Respondents as owelty of partition. Defendants 2 and 3 were minors at the time. In 1897 Defendants 2 and 3 for the first time applied for execution alleging that Defendant 2 had attained majority within 3 years before the date of the application and that Defendant 3 was still a minor. Defendants 12 and 13 the judgment-debtors objected that the application which was made seven years after the date of the decree was barred by limitation. The first Court held that sec. 7 of the Limitation Act applied to the case and therefore the application was within time. On appeal the lower Appellate Court upheld the judgment of the first Court.

The judgment-debtors preferred this appeal.

It was contended in second appeal on behalf of the judgment-debtors that sec. 7 applied only to cases where all the decree-holders were minors and did not apply to a case, where some only of several persons entitled to make an application were minors.

The contention was overruled and it was Held—That sec. 7 of the Limitation Act applied also to a case where only some of several persons entitled to apply were minors.

Govindram v. Tutia (1 L. R. 20 Bom. 383), Zamir Hasan v. Sundar [22 All. 199 (F. B.)] followed.

Seshan v. Raja Gopal (13 Mad. 236), Vinayakaram v. Rappayya (16 Mad. 436), Narayanan v. Danodaran (17 Mad. 189) dissented from.

It was further held that sec. 8 was not applicable to the case as one of several joint decree-holders cannot give a valid discharge.

Babus Basanta Kumar Bose and Harendra Narayan Mitter for the Appellants.

Babus Saroda Charan Mitter and Hari Bhushan Mookerjee for the Respondents.

Appeal dismissed

Extract.

THE CHUPRA CASE.

(From the Law Times.)

Some months ago the Government of India issued a resolution respecting the allegations against four European officers of the Champaran (Bengal) District, made by the district judge, Mr. Alfred Pennell, I. C. S., in deciding an appeal from the decision of a subordinate court in what has since been known as the Chupra case. While not absolving the officers in question from blame, the resolution criticised the apparent animus of Mr. Pennell's judgment, and described the whole affair as casting discredit on the Government, and as being calculated to weaken materially its authority and prestige. Mr. Pennell was transferred to the Noakhali District, the acknowledged insubordination of which led the native Press to describe the transfer as a punishment for judicial independence. Interest in the matter had, however, died away, when it was revived by a judgment given last month by Mr. Pennell in a case of alleged murder, followed by his commitment to prison, bail being refused, of Mr. Reilly, the district superintendent of police, on a charge of perjury and forgery in connection with the trial. The judgment, extending over 300 pages of manuscript, enters at length into the question of Mr. Pennell's personal relations with the Bengal Government, whom he accuses of attempting to "bury the scandal" of the Chupra case and of "shielding subordinates." He asked why, if his judgment in the Chupra case was wrong, the local Government did not appeal against it, and said there was the less reason for its hesitation to do so since two of the judges of the court, whom he named, had "a strong personal animosity" against him for private reasons. He complained that leave had been refused him, and controverted the views set forth in the resolution of the Government of India, remarking that he had been longer in the country than Lord Curzon and knew more about the mofussil than most of his Excellency's advisers, and he would have nothing to do with politics or considerations of political expediency. On application to the Calcutta High Court, Mr. Reilly, the incarcerated police official, was liberated on bail, and a rule was issued requiring the district magistrate, as representing the Crown, to show cause why the case against Mr. Reilly should not be transferred from Mr. Pennell's court. At the end of last month Mr. Pennell applied for casual leave, but on the recommendation of the High Court, to whom such applications from district judicial officers are invariably referred, it was refused. Mr. Pennell, however, left Noakhali and proceeded to Calcutta for the ostensible purpose of personally handing to the Chief Justice the record in the murder case. Sir Francis Maclean, according to affidavits sworn on Mr. Pennell's behalf, refused to see him or to receive the record. On the recommendation of the High Court Mr. Pennell was ordered on the 3rd March to return to Noakhali forthwith, and the next day he was directed to make over personally to the officiating registrar the entire record. Both orders were disregarded, and the High Court recommended the immediate suspension of Mr. Pennell for gross insubordination and misconduct. His suspension was accordingly gazetted, and his friends complain that, although Mr. Reilly has been suspended, a similar notification has not been published in his case. Mr. Pennell is understood to justify his presence in Calcutta without leave on the ground that his court was closed on the days in question on account of public holidays, and his refusal to return on the plea that the copying of the record he had to deliver over to the High Court was not then completed, and that it was necessary to remain to file certain affidavits. The refusal to make over the record he bases on the ground that the officiating registrar was not entitled to receive it. His case is warmly espoused by the native Press of Calcutta.—Times.

HYPNOTISM AS AN EXCUSE FOR CRIME.

The frequency with which the plea of hypnotism is being entered as a defence against criminal charges is becoming disquieting, chiefly because of the credence that is accorded to it in the vulgar mind. A recent case at Red Bud, Illinois, carries the matter to a reductio ad absurdum, and yet shows the dangerous hold that the notion of hypnotism as conferring an immunity from responsibility has taken upon people at large, from whom, of course, juries are drawn. A young man deliberately killed another young man after previously expressing his intention of killing him "on sight." He then gave himself up, and pleaded that he had killed his victim because the latter "had hypnotised him to his detriment." The coroner's jury acquitted the prisoner, apparently without any hesitation.

It is not by any means established that hypnotism can compel a person to the performance of any act otherwise morally impossible to the subject, or such as to revolt his moral sense in a moral condition. Hypnotism does not differ essentially from other forms of suggestion. It is all of a piece with the worked up fury of a crowd incited to violence by the diatribes of a mob orator, or the thousand and one forms of suggestion to which we all respond, by reflex action as it were, nearly every day of our lives. Under the influence of the slightest suggestions, we daily perform almost unconscious acts. But were the suggestions such as to prompt us to something totally at variance with our preconceived ideas and natural qualities and impulses, the spell would be broken and the influence of the suggestion be at once dissipated.

We are not forgetting that in hypnotic séances it is a very common sight to see some inoffensive and amiable subject ferociously seeking to stab perhaps his dearest friend with a paper knife or to shoot him with a ruler or other harmless object. But there are cases to show that under such circumstances the sub-consciousness is aware of the actual harmlessness of the procedure, and that, under circumstances in which real harm could be done or when such would wrongly seem to the subject to be possible, the subject becomes rebellious to the influence of the suggestion.

Further, if these absurd pleas of hypnotism are to be accepted, then in all forms of mob violence and crowd suggestion we must logically hold the doers of violence unanswerable for their acts. The capacity to recognise evil is by no means necessarily equivalent to the power to resist the impulse thereto, and there are many cases in which, without any pretence of hypnotism consciously or unconsciously exercised from without, the subject, while fully conscious of the gravity of the offence, is powerless to resist his impulses—which is only another name for "self-suggestions." The question of responsibility is one, therefore, for a careful examination of the subject, rather than of the circumstances, and what has to be decided is not whether the person was the subject of suggestion, whether from another person—"hypnotic" so-called—or from his own depraved impulses but whether he was so far a defective as to be really unable to resist them. The man who is "hypnotised," the subject of "crowd suggestion," and the victim of morbid impulses, most commonly of the sexual type, stand in the same category and should all be judged by the same rules. Not all subjects of morbid perversion are irresponsible; neither are all people who plead "hypnotism" as an excuse for their crimes, nor all transgressors under the influence of crowd suggestion, as in lynchings, mob violence, and the like. Such a plea should be received with the greatest caution, and in regard to hypnotism, as in the other cases, the entire morbid chain of perversion should be clearly demonstrated before the subject is held to be irresponsible and is absolved from the consequences of his crime.—New York Medical Journal.

REPORTS (See Index.)

MR. JUSTICE PRINSEP, THE SENIOR PUISNE JUDGE of the Calcutta High Court, will officiate as Chief Justice during the absence, on leave, of Sir Francis Maclean, who goes home to be present at the King's Coronation.

THE PROVISION MADE BY THE BENGAL GOVERNMENT in the Provincial Budget for the appointment of a new judge and additional ministerial staff for the Calcutta High Court, has met with the approval of the India Government. This was a foregone conclusion. But the sanction of the Secretary of State will yet have to be obtained. There is, however, little doubt that it will be given as a matter of course. But the question is whether that sanction will be asked for and obtained by wire, or will come in the usual course. In any event we expect that Mr. Justice Henderson, who is now officiating for Mr. Justice Sale on leave, will be confirmed in his present position with retrospective effect.

MR. JUSTICE PRINSEP'S RULING IN THE CASE OF King-Emperor v. Bhilepa Alam (post p 506) bearing on the question of the criminal liability of a person who may have lost all sense of responsibility from disease brought on by habitual intemperance, would commend itself as being consistent with approved principles. We wish, however, that the learned judge had fully set out the facts in his judgment. As it was a reference which was disposed of in camera and the records returned to the lower Court soon after, we regret very much to have to report the case without fully setting out the facts. The facts stated in the judgment however sufficiently explain the principle. We had on previous occasions pointed out how the defence of even a raving lunatic would be a psychological impossibility if sec. 81 of the Indian Penal Code had to be interpreted strictly, as it has often been done by the Courts in this country (5 C. W. N. cxevii). This is all the more the reason why the sound common sense view taken by the learned judge will be generally welcomed.

THE CASE OF Stuart v. Freeman NOTED BY US IN THIS issue is of great importance both to the insurers and the insured. The Law Journal commenting on it says :

The facts in Stuart v. Freeman were so remarkable that it is not to be wondered at that scarcely any similar cases can be recalled. The plaintiff was the assignee of a life policy, which contained the usual condition that the insurance would lapse if the premium was not paid within thirty days of the time when it became due. The premium was paid and accepted by a clerk of the insurers at three o'clock on the thirty-first day, but the person on whose life it was effected had died an hour before, a fact of which both parties were ignorant. Mr. Justice Grantham held that the insurers were not liable, and, indeed, it seems clear that the policy had lapsed, and that the acceptance of the premium by the clerk in ignorance of the true circumstances could not operate as a waiver or estoppel, so as to prevent the defendants from setting up this defence. A somewhat similar case is Pritchard v. The Merchants' Mutual Life Insurance Society (27 Law J. Rep. C. P. 169) the only difference being that the policy in that case contained a condition that the policy could be revived after default in payment of the premium, upon proof that the person insured was in good health.

CAN A MORTGAGE DECREE BE KEPT ALIVE FOR MORE THAN 12 YEARS?

The question, whether a mortgage decree, which directs the sale of the mortgaged property in the first instance, and if insufficient, the personal and other properties of the Defendant to remain liable for the balance of the decretal amount, can be kept alive for more than 12 years from the date of the decree or the date on which the money was made payable under the decree, is of considerable importance and it may be useful to ascertain the existing state of the law with regard to it.

The only provision of law which lays down that a decree shall not be executed after 12 years from the date of the decree is to be found in sec. 230 of the Civil Procedure Code. The first paragraph of that section no doubt deals with decrees generally, but the 3rd paragraph which lays down the 12 years' rule refers to decrees for the payment of money or delivery of other property; a mortgage decree certainly does not come under that category. It has been held by the Calcutta High Court in the cases of Jogmaya Dassi v. Thakomani Dassi (I. L. R. 24 Cal. 473), Fazil Howladar v. Krishna Bundhu Roy (I. L. R. 25 Cal. 580), Kartie Nath Pandey v. Jaggernath Ram Marwari (I. L. R. 27 Cal. 285), and also by the Allahabad High Court in the case of Ram Charan Bhugut v. Sheobari Roy (I. L. R. 16 All. 418) that a decree which directs the sale of the mortgaged property first and if insufficient, the Defendant to remain personally liable, is a mortgage decree and is not governed by sec. 230 of the Civil Procedure Code, and 12 years' limitation does not apply to such decrees. The Madras High Court in the case of Kammachi Kather v. Pakker (I. L. R. 20 Mad. 107) took a contrary view, but the Calcutta High Court dissented from it. The majority of cases on that point support, however, the view taken by the Calcutta and Allahabad High Courts. Therefore the law on the subject must be taken as laid down by the Calcutta and the Allahabad High Courts in the cases mentioned above.

The next question which is more important is, whether that part of the decree which makes the Defendant personally liable for the balance of the decretal amount which remains due after the sale of the mortgaged property, is also governed by sec. 230 of the Civil Procedure Code. It can be gathered from the opinions expressed in the cases of Fazil Howladar v. Krishna Bundhu Roy (I. L. R. 25 Cal. 580) and Kartie Nath Pandey v. Jaggernath Ram Marwari (I. L. R. 27 Cal. 285) that that portion of the decree, referred to above, is governed by sec. 230 of the C. P. C., but there is a conflict of opinion expressed in those two cases as to the date from which 12 years' limitation should begin to run. In Fazil Howladar's case that question was not directly in point. That case involved a question whether execution can proceed against the mortgaged property after 12 years from the passing of the decree; but the remarks which their Lordships made in that case tend to shew that personal liability was barred, as the decree which was passed on 16th May 1864 was executed on 30th November 1896, that is, after 12 years from the date of the decree. It is necessary to quote their Lordships' words to give an exact idea of what their Lordships meant.

Maclean, C. J., observed,—"I may here remark that in this case, as regards any personal liability of the Defendants to pay the money, both the Courts below have held that the application is too late, and the execution proceedings decreed are confined to a realisation of the property only."

Banerjee, J.—"The Courts below have already held that so much of the decree as authorizes the decree-holder to realise the judgment-debt out of any property of the judgment-debtor other than the mortgaged property is barred under sec. 230 of the Code and the only question now before us is, whether that portion of the decree which directs the realisation of the mortgaged debt by sale of the mortgaged property is also barred under sec. 230. The question ought, in my opinion, to be answered in the negative."

From the above remarks it is clear that that part of the decree which makes the Defendant personally liable for the balance of the decretal amount which remains due after the sale of the mortgaged property is governed by sec. 230 and becomes barred after 12 years from the date on which money was made payable under the decree. But in the case of Kartie Nath Pandey (I. L. R. 27 Cal. 285) the remedy against properties other than the mortgaged property was sought to be enforced on 5th November 1897 although the date of the decree was 26th February 1880, and it was held that the remedy against properties other than the mortgaged property was not barred as the decree was converted into a money-decree only after the sale of the mortgaged property on 5th July 1888 and not before, and that the 12 years' limitation began to run from the date on which the mortgaged property was sold, and it was found that it failed to satisfy the decree and a balance stood in favour of the decree holder. If this principle were applied to the case of Fazil Howladar (I. L. R. 25 Cal. 580) it would seem to follow that the personal liability did not become barred, since in that case the mortgaged property was not sold and the cause of action to enforce the personal liability did not then at all accrue. The law laid down in the case of Kartie Nath Pandey (I. L. R. 27 Cal. 285) as regards the enforcement of personal liability in respect of the balance of the decretal amount which remains due after the sale of the mortgaged property seems to us to be the more reasonable.

In any case we should like to see the decision in the case of Fazil Howladar (I. L. R. 25 Cal. 580) explained.

CRIMINAL CASES OF 1901.

BAIL.—The High Court has jurisdiction to release an accused on bail pending an appeal to the Privy Council (Queen-Empress v. Subramanya Ayyar, 24 Mad. 161). The High Court under special circumstances granted bail in In re Reilly, 5 C. W. N. cviii.

DISPOSAL OF PROPERTY.—Ordinarily property in stolen goods remains with the owner (I. N. W. P. 298, see 10 Mad. 25), unless purchased in market overt (see 20 W. R. 38); but property in cash, and bill or notes, which circulate as cash, is inseparable from possession, in the absence of fraud (1 N. W. P. 298; 7 Mad. H. C. R. 233; 3 Cal. 379). Coin when it is not legal tender, falls in the first category (In re Mathur, 25 Bom. 702). The object of sec. 522 is to restore the state of things existing at the time of dispossession, and under sub-sec. (2), a third party should seek remedy in the Civil Court. (Rameswar v. Biswanath, 5 C. W. N. 374, distinguishing 23 Bom. 494). It applies only where the dispossession is by actual force, and not by "show of force" (Srihari v. Lal Khan, 5 C. W. N. 257); Ram Chandra v. Jityandria, 25 Cal. 434; Ishar v. Dina, 4 C. W. N. 307). Sec. 523 does not apply to property produced in Court but remaining in the hands of the Police. Where certain logs were seized by the Police, not in connection with the pending case of rioting, but in a case of theft, which broke down for want of prosecution; held that the order was one within sec. 523 (Nasib v. Rukhmini, 5 C. W. N. 415).

TRANSFERS.—The rule laid down in In re Wilson, 18 Cal. 247, and Dupeyron v. Diver, 23 Cal. 495, that even a semblance of bias causing reasonable apprehension in the mind of a party is a good ground of transfer, is again enunciated in Bakta Singh v. Kali Prasad, 28 Cal. 297, and Lalit Mohan v. Surja, 5 C. W. N. 749; s. c. 28 Cal. 709. (See also 19 All. 64; 25 Cal. 727; 25 Bom. 179). Presence of a Magistrate at a search, during which he came to know of the facts of the case, held a good ground for transfer (Gya Singh v. Mohamed, 5 C. W. N. 864). It has been held in In re Pandurang, 25 Bom. 179, that sec. 526 does not apply to cases under sec. 145, Cr. P. C., but the Calcutta High Court considered the point doubtful, and founded the jurisdiction of the High Court, in such cases, upon sec. 15 of the Charter Act (Ghose, J.), or sec. 29 of the Letters Patent (Taylor, J.):—Lalit Mohan v. Surja, 5 C. W. N. 749; s. c. 28 Cal. 709. The Court ought to stay proceedings on receipt of a telegram from an accused or his pleader that a rule has been granted by the High Court. (Ratnessari v. Empress, 2 C. W. N. 498; In re Surjya, 5 C. W. N. 110; but see 19 Mad. 375), and precipitate action after such telegrams, especially when coupled with other circumstances, (e.g., cancelling bail on application under sec. 526, cl. (8) shows bias:—In re Surjya, 5 C. W. N. 110. Under sec. 528 the District Magistrate can transfer a case under sec. 145, Cr. P. C., to a Sub-ordinate Magistrate, though the land or water is not within his local jurisdiction, provided such Magistrate was vested with the powers of a proper class (Raj Mohan v. Prosunno, 5 C. W. N. 686). The case of Ayer v. King-Emperor, 5 C. W. N. 488, is a peculiar decision, and is of a class with Nukheda v. Ripu, 4 C. W. N. 239. When several persons are accused of an offence, and only one is sent up and tried, the trying Magistrate is junctus officio, thereafter. There is no other case before him then, and a District Magistrate, in taking action against the others whom the Magistrate has refused to summon upon subsequent complaint, acts either under sec. 190, or sec. 437, but sec. 528 seems inapplicable. The view that the trying Magistrate has seisin of the whole case even as against others not before him is contrary to the actual fact. Secs. 192, 528 refer to a "case," and not an "offence" as being transferred, and there is no case with reference to the persons not actually before the Court. The rule requiring notice to the opposite party under sec. 528 does not apply when the transfer is at the request of the trying Magistrate (Queen-Empress v. Kuppu Muthu, 24 Mad. 317).

IRREGULAR PROCEEDINGS.—Sec. 529 (f) cures an erroneous order of transfer in good faith of a case under sec. 145, Cr. P. C. (Raj Mohan v. Prosunno, 5 C. W. N. 686. See 4 C. W. N. 821). The words "not empowered" show that the section applies where the Magistrate is not competent by virtue of his position or powers vested in him to pass order (13 Bom. 502; 5 C. W. N. 686; 23 Cal. 898, p. 901, but see 5 C. W. N. 252). Where a Magistrate deliberately disregards the offence actually complained of, and tries for a minor offence, it is not a mere irregularity, but the proceedings are absolutely void under sec. 530 (Kailash v. Joyvanti, 5 C. W. N. 252). This was the view also of 8 Bom. 307, but is opposed to 13 Bom. 502 and Ayyan v. Villayappa, 24 Mad. 675. The negative form of the language of sec. 536 lends some support to the view that when an accused is wrongly tried by jury, the trial shall not on that ground only be invalid, i.e., the trial shall not be treated as a nullity, not that it shall be treated for all purposes as a valid jury trial (King-Emperor v. Parbhassankar, 25 Bom. 680, p. 693). This is the true view of the section. The onus of showing a failure of justice under sec. 537 is, in the view of Benson, J., on the accused (King-Emperor v. Tirumal, 24 Mad. 523, p. 532). One would have thought that an irregularity having occurred, the presumption would be on the other side. Sec. 537 cures an irregularity in passing an order of discharge under sec. 494, Cr. P. C., instead of an acquittal (Queen-Empress v. Hussein, 25 Bom. 422, p. 428), and want of sanction (Sundar v. Sital, 28 Cal. 219; but see 22 Cal. 176, p. 179).

MISCELLANEOUS.—In Empress v. Mungroo, 5 C. W. N. xlvii, a Judge presiding at the Original Criminal Sessions of the High Court examined a Presidency Magistrate as to his mode of recording a confession. Sec. 31 of the Court Fees Act is not modified by sec. 545, Cr. P. C. (Queen-Empress v. Yamana, 24 Mad. 305).

COMPETENCY.—Authorization of a prosecution, as distinguished from initiating or directing the same, does not render a Magistrate incompetent within sec. 556 (Queen-Empress v. Chenchi, 24 Mad. 328).

CHANCERY DIVISION.—IRELAND v. HART AND OTHERS. Before Mr. Justice Joyce. 20th January 1902.

Pledge of shares—Blank transfer—Equitable owner—Inchoate right—Rectification of register.

Some shares in a Limited Liability Company had belonged to the Plaintiff, the wife of one H. C. Ireland. She being desirous that he should attend meeting and vote in matters concerning the Company had the said shares transferred and registered in her husband's name in the Company's books. Mr. Ireland being in need of money borrowed from the Defendant Hart on the security of those shares which he purported to deal with as his own. Hart was unaware of the said transfer by the wife to the husband. Mr. Ireland had executed a blank transfer which signed by him together with the certificate for the said shares he handed to Hart. The loan not being repaid, Hart filled in the blank transfer and on 23rd November 1901 left it with the certificate for registration into his own name at the Company's office. The Secretary not being satisfied called on Mr. Ireland who requested that the registration should be delayed. The directors made no objection to the delay, and on the same day the writ in this action was issued on behalf of Mrs. Ireland, and an interim injunction was granted restraining the transfer of the shares. The question arose in this case, whether under the above circumstances the Defendant Hart, as a bona fide purchaser for value without notice of Mrs. Ireland's equitable title, was entitled to be registered as the proprietor of the said shares.

The learned Judge held that he was not. The judgment states that the transfer in question was valid and Hart had authority to fill up the blanks in the transfer as it suited his purpose because the articles of association of the Company did not require a transfer of shares to be by deed [vide In re Tahiti Cotton Co. (17 Eq. 273)].* The directors were not bound to register the transfers at their first meeting. They were entitled for a reasonable time to put off registration in order to enable them to make enquiries, yet in this case having regard to the form of the articles of the Company, the legal title to the shares was not acquired as against an equitable owner before registration, or at all events until the person seeking registration had established a present and absolute right to be registered. Hart had merely an inchoate right and therefore Mrs. Ireland's prior equitable right prevailed (see Société Générale de Paris v. Walker, 11 App. Cas. 20).

Mr. Hughes, K. C., and Mr. Mitchell for the Plaintiff.

KING'S BENCH DIVISION.—STUART v. FREEMAN. Before Mr. Justice Ridley. 14th April 1902.

Insurance policy—Payment of premium after due date.

PRITCHARD v. MERCHANTS ASSURANCE COMPANY (3 C. B. N. S. 622) followed.

The Hon'ble Francis C. Lawley was indebted to the firm of Algor Stuart & Co. of which Plaintiff was a member in the sum of £2,500. To secure same, Mr. Lawley insured his life in the General Life Assurance Company and assigned the same to Plaintiff. The Defendant Freeman was the manager of that Insurance Company. It was provided by the policy, that in the event of any of the quarterly payments being in arrear for over 30 days the policy was to become void. The premium due on 18th August became in arrear on 17th September 1901. Between 3 and 4 o'clock on 18th September 1901, Plaintiff paid to Defendant and he received the arrears due. Both parties were then ignorant that just an hour previously Mr. Lawley had died (i.e., at 2 o'clock on 18th September 1901).

The Plaintiff on Defendant's refusal to pay the £2,500 on the policy brought this action to recover it. On the facts it was contended on behalf of Defendant that the policy had become void by reason of the premium being in arrear and a subsequent payment after the death of the insured cannot revive it.

The learned Judge accepted that view on the authority of the above case as conclusive and gave judgment for the Defendant holding that there was no liability on the part of the Insurance Company to pay under the circumstances disclosed.

Mr. Elton Banks, K. C., Mr. Arthur Powell, K. C., and Mr. Marshall in support of the claim.

Mr. Duke, K. C., and Mr. Hall for the Defendant.

THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA IN COUNCIL

v.

KRISHNAMONI GUPTA and others, and the Cross Appeal.

Chur land—Adverse possession—Limitation.

KALI CHURN SAHOO v. SECRETARY OF STATE
(I. L. R. 6 Cal. 725) overruled.

The suit relates to certain chur lands. Those lands are claimed by Plaintiffs (locally known as the Banibaha Baboos) as re-formed lands of their Mouzah Thowkuri of Taraf Selem pore, Pergunnah Anurabad, being a portion of lands released to their ancestors in 1827 by the Revenue authorities as appertaining to their permanently-settled estates of Selem pore and Durgapore in the Farid pore and Pubna Towjis respectively.

The Government claimed them as appertaining to their khas mehals of Danchi Sonakonder and Gachehadabo.

A local investigation was made by an Amin in this suit and a map prepared by him. The Sub-Judge of Farid pore determined the dispute on the basis of the thak and survey maps of 1858-9 as showing that they established Defendant's title. He also held that as more than 12 years had elapsed since that survey, and the proceedings thereafter show that Government had been in possession, and Plaintiffs had failed to prove their possession, the suit was barred by limitation.

Against the decision of the Subordinate Judge, the Plaintiffs appealed to the High Court.

Judgment of the High Court was delivered on the 8th June 1898.

The Court found that the Plaintiffs had sufficiently shown that the lands now claimed are the lands lying to the north of Iswar Chunder Das's line, and is part of the tract of 9,407 bighas released to Plaintiffs in 1827, as forming part of their permanently-settled estate. The Plaintiffs' title being proved, the learned Judges went on to consider whether the suit was barred by limitation. They held that, as regards the lands lying on the north of the river bank, as it existed in 1869, limitation did not apply, the possession of Government being for a period of less than 12 years, but they held that as to those lying to the south thereof, Government had acquired an adverse title by being in possession for over 12 years.

They therefore drew a line almost midway across the disputed land as shown on the Amin's map, and marked that line with their name placed thereon, and so decreed such of it as lay to the north, and dismissed the claim to those to the south thereof, each party paying his own costs. The learned Judges say that the applicability of the law of limitation by adverse possession under the circumstances of this litigation was one of some difficulty and of considerable importance.

Mr. Arthur Cohen, K. C., and Mr. Branson for the Appellant contended that the suit was barred by limitation. They did not contest the decision of the High Court that Plaintiffs, the Banibaha Baboos, had proved that the lands in dispute were part of their permanently-settled lands, but they urged that that as from 1849 to 1859, then from 1859 to 1869 Plaintiffs had been in possession as lessees under Government, after their claim to hold those as their zemindari or free hold was denied by the Revenue authorities, Government had adverse possession and Plaintiffs' claim was barred by limitation; to get rid of that claim Plaintiffs must prove 60 years' possession against Government; the High Court had found at most a few months' possession which was not sufficient. It was urged that Government having been in possession when the land was dry, it must be presumed that their possession continued when the land was covered with water.

The following authorities were noticed:

Kali Churn Sahoo v. Secretary of State (I. L. R. 6 Cal. 725), Shrin Mohan Ghose v. Mothura Mohan Roy (I. L. R. 7 Cal., see 231), De Burres v. Shey (22 W. R., see 276), Taylor v. Hali (2 Smith Leading case, p. 634).

Mr. Mayne and Mr. C. W. Aruthoon for the Respondents and cross-Appellants contended that the suit was not barred by limitation.

The ijarah settlement from 1849 for about 10 years were of the jajira or Island chur lands. Those lands were taken possession of by Government under the wrong interpretation of the law then prevailing in India which was set right in the Lopez case (13 Moore I. A 467). That settlement did not comprise the lands now in dispute. The lands south of the line marked by the present Amin as the resumed line of 1845 are not lands the Plaintiffs now claim. Therefore that settlement does not help the Defendant. The settlement of 1858-9 for another 10 years did include parts of the land now in dispute, but those lands were in 1869 submerged and it cannot be said that the Government, as it is now admitted as a wrong-doer, had adverse possession of it as against the rightful owner. Indeed the Government had not any possession at all. The case in the 7th Calcutta Series was in Plaintiffs' favour.

[LORD DAVEY—Mr. Justice White in that case seems to have at first taken the view you are now suggesting. His Lordship read the passage].

Mr. Mayne.—Yes. The case in the 6th Calcutta is bad law.

Reference was then made to Savigny on Possession by Sir Erskine Perry (1848), Book 3, pp. 245, 253, 258 and 265.

[LORD DAVEY.—You say there was neither corporeal possession in Government nor the animus].

Mr. Mayne.—Yes, a failure in either is sufficient for me. Savigny says, possession is lost whenever the power of dealing with the subject ceases.

Reference was then made to ex parte Fletcher (5 Ch. D. at 813) and Jones v. Chapman (2 Exchequer 821).

[LORD MACNAGHTEN.—That case was referred to in Lowes v. Telford (1 App. Cas. 414) before the House of Lords.

LORD DAVEY.—Under what article is it said this suit is barred.]

Mr. Cohen.—Article 144.

Mr. Mayne referred to article 142 and observed upon the “discontinuance.”

[LORD DAVEY drew attention to the Squire's case from Australia (13 App. Cas., p. 793)].

As regards the Secretary of State's appeal it was submitted that there was not 12 years' adverse possession.

As regards the cross-appeal reference was made to Regulation I of 1793, to the case of the Secretary of State in 17 Indian Appeal, at p. 40, and it was contended that the Government had no right to a double assessment of lands permanently settled. The argument in the High Court on that point was supported.

LORD DAVEY delivered their Lordships' judgment, advising His Majesty to dismiss both appeals. The Appellants in each case to pay the costs of the respective appeals.

In the course of the judgment it is said that Kali Churn Sahoo's case (1 L. R. 6 Cal. 725) was erroneously decided and should be overruled.

Mr. Arthur Cohen, K. C., and Mr. Branson for the Secretary of State.

Mr. Mayne and Mr. C. W. Arathoon for Krishnamoni Gupta and others.

MIRZA MAHOMED ASKARI,

Petitioner,

v.

MIR AHAMED HOSSEIN,

Opposite Party.

Discharge of accused person.—Re-issue of process upon accused on the same facts.—Magistrates, mofussil or provincial, power of.—Acquittal.—Further enquiry, order for, if necessary, before re-issue of process.—Code of Criminal Procedure (Act V of 1898), secs. 253, 215, 403, 437.—Warrant-case.

This was a rule issued against the order of Moulvi Serajul Huq, Esq., Deputy Magistrate of Alipur, dated the 31st July 1901.

The facts of the case material to this report were as follows :—

Mir Ahamed Hossein lodged a complaint against the Petitioner Mirza Mahomed Askari before Moulvi Serajul Huq, Deputy Magistrate of Alipur, charging him with offences under secs. 426, 295 and 297 of the Penal Code. The case came on for hearing on the 27th July 1901 and on an application made on behalf of the Petitioner, who was absent, his personal attendance was dispensed with by the Magistrate. On the same day a petition was put in by the complainant stating that inasmuch as the Petitioner Mirza Mahomed Hossein had expressed his regret and made an apology to him, he was willing to withdraw the case. On the 29th July 1901 the Magistrate passed an order on the said petition to the following effect :—“Under the circumstance represented the accused is acquitted under sec. 248, Cr. P. Code, of the charge under sec. 426, I. P. Code. He is discharged under sec. 253, Cr. P. Code, in respect of the offences under secs. 295 and 297, I. P. Code.”

On the same day a counter-petition was filed on behalf of the accused stating that he had not expressed his regret or made any apology as stated by the complainant and that the complainant withdrew from the case as the case was entirely groundless and frivolous. On the 31st July the complainant made another application to the Deputy Magistrate praying that the case against the Petitioner might be revived as on the denial of the regret and apology by the Petitioner the only ground for the withdrawal was removed and it became nugatory. The Deputy Magistrate thereupon made the following order :—“Summon the accused under secs. 295 and 297, Indian Penal Code, for the 15th August 1901.”

Against that order the Petitioner moved the High Court and obtained the present rule on the ground that there having been a previous order of discharge by the Magistrate, he was not competent to re-issue summons on the accused unless and until that order of discharge was set aside.

On the hearing of the rule before Prinsep and Stephen, JJ., their Lordships on the 27th January 1902 made the following reference to the Full Bench :—

The Magistrate in this case, on the 19th July, discharged the accused of offences under secs. 295 and 297, Indian Penal Code, and, on the 31st idem, on the representation of one of the parties that he had proceeded on a misrepresentation, he has commenced proceedings in regard to the same offence by issue of summons on the accused. A Division Bench of this Court has, on these facts, granted a rule to consider why the order “summoning the Petitioner to consider such charges should not be withdrawn upon the ground that, having regard to the earlier order of the same Magistrate of 29th July discharging the accused in respect of charges under these very sections, he has no authority to make the order in question."

The question raised is, in our opinion, the same as that raised in the recent Full Bench case of Dwarka Nath Mandal v. Beni Madhab Banerjee (5 C. W. N. 457: s. c. I. L. R. 28 Cal. 652), in which, however, the Full Bench considered the proceedings of a Presidency Magistrate, whereas, in the present case, the proceedings are those of another Magistrate. No doubt there is no reported case in which it has been held that a Magistrate is not competent to take proceedings after an order of discharge unless an order for further enquiry shall have been passed under sec. 437, Code of Criminal Procedure. But this interpretation of the law has been laid down in the cases of Nil Ratan Sen v. Jogesh Chandra Bhattacharji (I. L. R. 23 Cal. 983) and Kamal Chandra Pal v. Gour Chand Audhikari (I. L. R. 24 Cal. 286), in respect of an order dismissing a complaint and unless we are prepared to follow the reasons upon which those cases were decided, we feel that we should be interpreting the law in a manner opposed to that expressed by the learned Judges in those cases. We are not prepared to accept this view of the law and we, therefore, refer the matter for decision by a Full Bench. The point referred is whether a Magistrate in a warrant-case having passed an order of discharge is competent to take fresh proceedings and issue process against the accused in respect of the same offence unless an order for further inquiry shall have been passed under sec. 437, Code of Criminal Procedure, having the effect of setting aside such order of discharge.

Babu Bankim Chandra Sen for the Petitioner.—The cases of Nil Ratan Sen v. Jogesh Chandra Bhattacharji (I. L. R. 23 Cal. 983) and Kamal Chandra Pal v. Gour Chand Audhikari (I. L. R. 24 Cal. 286) were rightly decided—Relied on the dictum in I. L. R. 23 Cal. at p. 988. The question so far as it affected the Presidency Magistrate was set at rest by the Full Bench decision in Dwarka Nath Mandal v. Beni Madhab Banerjee (5 C. W. N. 457: s. c. I. L. R. 28 Cal. 652); but there was a clear distinction between a Presidency Magistrate and a Mofussil Magistrate. The distinction followed from the existence of sec. 437 in the Code. That section provided a special remedy and it was significant that while it gave the superior Courts in the mofussil, such as the Court of Sessions and District Magistrates, powers of revision in such matters, it excluded from its operation the Presidency Magistrates, who possess higher status and powers in other matters than the Mofussil Magistrates. See the remark of the Chief Justice in the case of Dole Gobinda v. The Empress (5 C. W. N. 169 at page 172) and also the remark of Prinsep, J., in the case of Apoorba Coomarr Sett v. Probode Coomari Dass (1 C. W. N. 49 at page 51). The Code made no distinction between one kind of discharge and another, so far as the remedial measures were concerned. The case of Hari Das Sanyal v. Suriatulla (I. L. R. 15 Cal. 608) was also referred to.

Babu Srish Chandra Chowdhury for the Crown.—The case had been practically decided by the Full Bench case in I. L. R. 28 Cal. 652. Sec. 403 laid down that "a discharge" was not an "acquittal." Sec. 369 spoke of whether the order of discharge was a judgment. It had been answered in I. L. R. 28 Cal. 652. The order of discharge was not a judgment. Sec. 437 related to the revisional powers of superior Courts and not to original proceedings. It only showed how far enquiries should be directed but said nothing about setting those aside. The general principle was laid down by the Chief Justice in Dole Gobinda v. Empress in I. L. R. 28 Cal. 210. The case mentioned in the referring order would be substantially met by the same argument.

Monti Shamsul Huda for the Complainant.—Whether the order of discharge was or was not a judgment was not material. Sec. 403 did not say that where an order of discharge was in force it would be a bar to a fresh trial.

Babu Bankim Chandra Sen in reply.—Sec. 403 did not stand in his way. It should be read along with the other sections of the Code. Explanation II of sec. 215 of Act X of 1872 which corresponded with sec. 253 of the present Code had been omitted from the present Code.

Held by the FULL BENCH (GHOSH, J., dissenting).—That the question had been practically answered in the Full Bench case of Dwarka Nath Mandal v. Beni Madhab Banerjee (5 C. W. N. 457: s. c. I. L. R. 28 Cal. 652); that there was no difference in principle between the cases of Presidency and Mofussil Magistrates; that sec. 437 of the Code was an enabling section and it could not take away the powers of a Magistrate otherwise vested in him; that the question referred should be answered in the affirmative.

Per GHOSH, J.—That for the reasons stated in his judgment in Dwarka Nath Mandal v. Beni Madhab Banerjee (5 C. W. N. 457: s. c. I. L. R. 28 Cal. 652), the question should be answered in the negative; but that in the present case the order of discharge was not a judgment and the Magistrate could re issue summons.

Rule discharged.

RULE No. 3098 OF 1901.

PRATT, J. ABED-MOLLAH, Auction-purchaser, GEIDT, J. Petitioner,
1902.

8, May. ] DILJAN MOLLAH, Opposite Party.

Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), sec. 310A—Under warrant, whether may deposit money under the section and apply for setting aside the sale of a holding—Person whose immovable property has been sold," meaning and extent of—Applicability of the section—Jurisdiction.

This was a rule against an order of Babu Rajani Nath Mitter, Munsif of Basirhat, dated the 14th September 1901.

The facts of the case material to this report were as follows:—

A jama of the judgment-debtor was advertized for sale. Diljan Mollah, an under-tenant or sub-raiyat of the judgment-debtor, applied under sec. 310A of the Code of Civil Procedure to have the sale set aside on payment into Court of the decretal amount and interest, &c., as provided by that section. The Munsif held that the principle laid down in the Full Bench case of Paresh Nath Singh and others v. Nobogopal Chattopadhyay and others, (5 C. W. N. 821; s. c. I. L. R. 29 Cal. 1) was applicable to the case inasmuch as a sub-tenancy under the Bengal Tenancy Act was an incumbrance, and permitted the applicant to deposit the money and ordered that on such deposit the sale be set aside.

Against this order the Auction-purchaser Petitioner moved the High Court and obtained the present rule.

On behalf of the Petitioner it was contended that the Full Bench case relied on by the lower Court did not intend to nor did it in fact lay down any such rule; that in that case the question was whether a simple mortgagee could come in under sec. 310A and apply for the setting aside of a sale and it was held that he could; that it did not decide nor was the case before the Full Bench that an under-raiyat could come in under that section. On the contrary in the case of Administrator-General of Bengal v. Mahomed Khobli [5 C. W. N. 132 (cxxxv)], Reference No. 5A of 1900, decided by Prinsep and Hill, JJ., on the 13th March 1901, it was held that a hoveladar under a tenure-holder was not a person whose immoveable property had been sold within the meaning of sec. 310A, C. P. Code. The case of Bepin Behary Sarmokar v. Kali Das Chatterjee (6 C. W. N. 336) was also relied upon.

Held—That an under-tenant or an under-raiyat was not a person whose immoveable property could be said to have been sold within the meaning of sec. 310A and that such a person could not come in and apply to have the sale of a jama or holding set aside under that section.

REPORTS (See Index.)

THE KING HAS NOTIFIED THAT HIS BIRTHDAY WILL be observed on the 24th of May yearly.—Reuter.

THE EMPEROR'S ANNOUNCEMENT THAT HIS MAJESTY'S birthday will be observed on his mother's birthday will be greatly appreciated in India. The 9th of November, which is the King's birthday, also happens to be the Lord Mayor's Day in London. It is very considerate of the King to have decided that the City of London should not thus be deprived of a holiday. That the King did not fix his birthday celebration a day earlier or later in November, but settled that the Royal birthday should continue to be celebrated as before on the 24th of May, shows His Majesty's devotion to the memory of his mother. Such filial sentiment is so popular in the East that it will add considerably to the popularity of the King amongst his Oriental subjects.

THE ANNOUNCEMENT IN THE PUBLIC PRESS THAT A telegram has been received from Darjeeling stating that the Bengal Government does not intend to gazette May 24th, as a public holiday has been received at Calcutta with considerable surprise.

WE REGRET TO ANNOUNCE THE PREMATURE DEATH of Sir Arthur Strachey, the Chief Justice of the Allahabad High Court. We had the unpleasant duty of criticising his exposition of the law of sedition which met with the approval of the Indian Legislature and was followed by his promotion to his past position. But now that death has so early closed upon his worldly career we have nothing but sorrow for him and the deepest sympathy for Lady Strachey. Free from passion or prejudice and in all fairness to the memory of the dead we must say that he never proved unequal to any of the high positions to which he had been so rapidly raised. He was always courteous, patient and painstaking as a judge and, barring his forced construction of the sedition section of the Penal Code, his decisions generally commanded confidence.

THE READINESS WITH WHICH THE MONEY FOR A marble statue of Lord Russell of Killowen has been subscribed, is without a precedent in the history of the Bench. The only other instance that at all approaches it is the legacy of £1,500 that was left by a grateful client out of which the splendid monument above Lord Mansfield's grave in Westminster Abbey was erected. But there is a vast degree of difference between the two. While the late Lord Chief Justice's statue is being paid for by the profession and the public, Lord Mansfield's memorial was erected by a private party for whom he had succeeded, when at the Bar, in recovering a large estate. The tribute that the public have given to Lord Russell has not been won by him by merely his forensic talent but by the far more sterling qualities that made him command respect on the bench and enjoy the confidence of the public. His statue will be erected in the Central Hall of the Royal Court of Justice. The work has been entrusted to Mr. Brock, R. A., who expects to complete the plaster model before the Long Vacation during which it will be kept on view at the spot selected for the marble statue to enable the public and the profession to judge of the great artist's future work. Erskine's statue which was also paid for by the public ought to find a place close to that of the late Lord Chief Justice.

WE ARE GLAD TO NOTICE THAT A JURYMAN'S representation of their grievances in respect of a waiting room has elicited a response from the Court that the matter is, under consideration and may before long be remedied. But we cannot but express our regret that the complaint of starvation by Crown witnesses did not attract any attention at all. The Code of Criminal Procedure, sec. 544, contemplates it to be the duty of a Criminal Court to exercise its discretion with regard to the payment of the reasonable expenses of witnesses. The judges in the mofussil always consider it a part of their ordinary duty to enquire into such matters and make the necessary orders as provided by law. Instances have come to our knowledge where judges, moved by the hardship of cases similar to this, have gone out of their way to help the aggrieved even out of their own pocket. We are much grieved, therefore, that in a Court, high above them all, a complaint of starvation should have passed unheeded.

WE INVITE ATTENTION TO MR. JUSTICE RIDLEY'S recent decision on a money-lending transaction at a usurious and oppressive rate of interest, which we reproduce at length in our notes column in this issue. If may be of some assistance in the interpretation of the sec. 16, (3), ill. c. of the Indian Contract Act as amended by Act VI of 1899. As for the portion of Mr. Justice Ridley's decision dealing with the general principles governing cases of harsh and unconscionable bargain, our article on the same subject at p. cxiii, in Vol. III, C. W. N., may also be referred to. It is but right that a decision of such vital importance should be appealed from and we shall await with interest the pronouncement of the Appeal Court and of the House of Lords on this question. We expect the present Lord Chancellor will retire by the time this judgment is taken to the final Court of Appeal. In the meantime we may take the general principles of law, which is but another name for strong common sense, as our guide in the interpretation of our, by no means lucid, codified laws.

COURT OF APPEAL.—SADBROKE v. HOLE. Before the MASTER OF THE ROLLS, LORDS JUSTICES COLLINS and ROMER. 8th March 1901.

Libel—Communication in a post-card—Publication—Privileged communication.

Defendant wishing that certain building works should be done to his house property received tenders from several builders for his specification. Finding that certain mistakes had been made in taking out the quantities he wrote as follows on a post-card to one of the builders.

"Quantities sent to you by architect are entirely wrong." The Plaintiff was the architect's clerk and was responsible for the correctness of the quantities.

There was also another post-card, but the libel was based on the first post-card above set out.

Defendant pleaded privileged communication. Mr. Justice Ridley held that the publication was not privileged and the jury gave verdict for Plaintiff for £5.

The COURT OF APPEAL allowed the appeal finding that the privilege covered the libel; there was privilege between the Defendant and the builder. The publication to persons other than the builder could not be substantiated. The post-cards did not contain Plaintiff's name and was not intelligible to others than the person to whom it was sent. The post-card was not prima facie publication about the Plaintiff at all. Plaintiff had failed to connect the libel with himself. There was no evidence of express malice. The mere fact of communication in a post-card was not evidence of malice.

COURT OF APPEAL.—ROBINSON v. W. H. SMITH AND SON. Before the MASTER OF THE ROLLS, LORDS JUSTICES WILLIAMS and ROMER. 16th April 1901.

Master and servant—Negligence—Dangerous occupation—Duty of master towards a child.

The Plaintiff was a boy of 12 years of age. He was occupied as a newspaper lad at the Walsall station and commenced his services on 5th December 1898. His duty was to procure papers from one of the station platforms and deliver papers fetched from there to the town. That platform was surrounded by a line of railways. There was a foot-bridge over the line, but the newspaper boys were in the habit of crossing the line, a path notified to passengers as dangerous. The newspaper boys did not use the foot-bridge which was a longer route than that across the metals. The evidence disclosed that the Defendants' servant who had charge of the book-stall had not warned Plaintiff of the danger he was running into. On 24th February 1899 Plaintiff, about 180 yards from the station, was knocked down by a passing train while he was delivering papers and by that accident he lost his leg.

In his action for damages for personal injuries caused as above, the County Court Judge of Walsall dismissed the claim on the ground that there was no evidence of negligence to go to the jury.

The Divisional Court on the boy's appeal was of opinion that the non-suit was wrong, that the employment being of a dangerous character, a duty was thrown upon Defendants of special warning.

On the Defendants' appeal the Court of Appeal was of opinion that the case should go before a jury, the duty which the Defendants owed to the child was a superior duty to that which they owed to a man. The master should have ordered the boy to use the bridge and not cross the metals. The mere knowledge by the Plaintiff of the danger was not sufficient to exonerate the Defendants. A new trial was ordered.

Mr. Bankes and Mr. T. Lawes for the Defendants.

Mr. Ruegg, K. C., and Mr. Hamilton for the Plaintiff.

COURT OF APPEAL.—TIMMINS v. THE LEEDS FORGE COMPANY. Before the LORDS JUSTICES A. L. SMITH, VAUGHAN WILLIAMS and ROMER. 21st July 1900.

What is an "accident."

This was a case under the Workman's Compensation Act, 1897. The decision of Judge Greenhow of the Leeds County Court was in favour of the workman. The question was whether the injury to the workman was caused by an "accident." For the Company it was argued that the workman was employed in his ordinary work, he was aware that the planks he was lifting were frozen by the unusual frost which had then recently occurred. There was nothing fortuitous or unexpected and so it was not an accident. Hensey v. White (16 The Times Law Reports 64) was relied on.

THE COURT said:—In consequence of rain and frost the planks had been frozen together, the workman was engaged in removing piles of them, as he went lower down the harder the planks stuck together and the more exertion was required on the workman's part. In removing the lower planks he ruptured himself. In the opinion of the Court there was evidence upon which the County Court Judge could find that the injury was caused by something fortuitous and unexpected by reason of the planks sticking together.

The appeal would be dismissed with costs.

COURT OF APPEAL.—SAFFREY v. MAYER. Before the MASTER OF THE ROLLS, LORDS JUSTICES COLLINS and STIRLING. 5th November 1900.

Gaming—Money paid—8 and 9 Vict., c. 109—The Gaming Act, 1892, 55 and 56 Vict., c. 9.

The question in this action arose under the Gaming Act, 1892, whether the transactions which took place between Plaintiff and Defendant came within that Act, or whether, as held by Mr. Justice Darling, what the parties did amounted to a mutual agreement to enter into a partnership to back race horses;

The Plaintiff Saffrey was the trustee in bankruptcy of one Claude Vanton. The last-named advanced £500 to the Defendant Mayer on the understanding that the latter would work his newly invented system of making money by backing horses. The profits to arise, it was settled, were to be equally divided, and the Defendant was to be liable for half the £500 advanced. Having lost the £500, the Defendant gave promissory notes for £250 to Plaintiff and obtained from him a further sum of £150 as advance.

The present action was to recover £433 as due under the said promissory notes. Plaintiff succeeded before Mr. Justice Darling who heard the cause without a jury, but on the Defendant's appeal, the Court of Appeal unanimously reversed that decision on the ground, that on a right understanding of the facts the transaction between the parties fell within the purview of the Gaming Act. Reference in the judgment was made to Tatum v. Reeve (1893, 1 Q. B. 44) which, it is said, was rightly decided.

Mr. Abneger for the Appellant.

Mr. Jones, Q. C., and Mr. Kisch for the Respondent.

Appeal allowed with costs.

KING'S BENCH DIVISION.—ANDERSON v. COLLINSON. Before the LORD CHIEF JUSTICE and MR. JUSTICE LAWRENCE. 17th April 1901.

Seduction action—Judgment in bastardy proceedings—Estoppel.

The Plaintiff alleged that her daughter had been seduced and brought this action against the seducer for damages. Previous to this action the girl herself had commenced bastardy proceedings against the Defendant and had obtained an order of affiliation. That order was made by the Justices pronouncing the Defendant to be the father of the girl. At Quarter Sessions such order was quashed. The question in the present seduction action was whether Plaintiff was estopped by the result of the bastardy proceedings from alleging that Defendant was the father of the child. Defendant contended that the decision of the Quarter Sessions was a judgment in rem not merely inter partes.

The Darlington County Court Judge left the matter for decision of the jury who found for Plaintiff £250 damages.

On this application on behalf of the Defendant for a new trial or judgment, the Court, as above constituted, state that all that was decided by the Queen v. Glynne (L. R. 7 Q. B. 16) was that the question of paternity of the child was concluded as between the parties by the affiliation decision; concluded as between the girl and the Defendant. This action was brought by the girl's mother.

The County Court Judge was right and the application failed.

Judgment for Plaintiff.

KING'S BENCH DIVISION.—WRIGHT v. GLYN. Before MR. JUSTICE GRANTHAM. 20th April 1901.

Master and servants—Dealing of servant with tradesmen—Liability of master.

The Plaintiff in this case was the personal representative of a corn merchant, named Trigg. The Defendant, Mr. Glyn, had made an arrangement with his coachman paying the latter under such arrangement a certain sum as wages which was to include the cost of foraging his horses. Plaintiff's case was that the coachman ordered forage from his establishment on behalf of his master the Defendant Glyn, without telling the manager of Mr. Trigg of the arrangement with his master. The coachman left Mr. Glyn's service in November 1898 on Mr. Glyn leaving for Australia. On Mr. Glyn's return he for the first time received a bill for the amount £95 unpaid for forage supplied. The defence was that there was to the knowledge of Mr. Trigg's manager a common practice for owners of horses to enter into the arrangement Mr. Glyn had adopted with his coachman and such knowledge put Plaintiff into enquiry.

The learned Judge following Remell v. Sampayo (1 C. & P. 254) and Precious v. Abel (1 Esp. 350) gave judgment for Plaintiff with costs.

KING'S BENCH DIVISION.—JAMES WILTON & Co. v. OSBORNE. Before MR. JUSTICE RIDLEY. 19th April 1901.

This was an action by a firm of money-lenders to recover from the Rev. James Osborne, a Lincolnshire rector, the sum of £56, alleged to be due on a promissory note.

MR. JUSTICE RIDLEY, in stating the facts, said that the Defendant had obtained from the Plaintiffs a loan of £40, and had given them a promissory note, which had been renewed 14 times, each renewal costing £6. In November the Defendant wished to pay off the capital, and he applied to the Plaintiffs to ask on what terms that could be done. Their first answer was that the capital could be paid off if he gave them a promissory note for £60, payable in four instalments of £15, the total sum being payable at once if any instalment was not paid. The Defendant asked for better terms, and in the result he gave them a promissory note for £56, payable in four quarterly instalments of £14, and in default of one payment the whole remaining balance was immediately to become due and payable. It was on this note that the action was brought. The first instalment had not been paid, so that the whole sum became immediately payable, and the interest worked out at 160 per cent. His Lordship then read the following written judgment:—From these facts it appears to me that the interest charged in respect of the transaction now sued upon must be regarded as excessive, and that the whole transaction was harsh and unconscionable in the sense that the charges made were excessive and extortionate. As to the original note, and the renewals of it, I am not sure that the charges then made would properly ly be so described, although the interest did amount to 60 per cent. "Excessive" means excessive with regard to the circumstances, and here the Defendant was not in a position to pay the amount advanced, nor was there any security for its repayment. But it is not necessary to decide that, thinking as I do about the note subsequently taken and now sued upon. It is now contended that, under the first section of the Money-lenders Act, 1900, the Court has power to reopen the transaction and order an account to be taken, or in some other way grant relief to the Defendant, and as the point is, I believe, a new one, I took time to consider my decision. It appears to be established by a series of decisions that a Court of equity will not grant relief in such cases merely because the charges or interest are excessive. Every case has indeed to be judged by its own circumstances; but unless the borrower be of the class known as expectant heirs (which requires distinctive consideration) the rule is that, assuming him to be of full capacity, relief will not be granted unless it can be shown that he has been overreached, tricked, or deceived, and that the money-lender has taken an unfair and undue advantage of his weakness and necessities. The general rule is that neither excess of interest nor exorbitance of charge will suffice unless the element of unfair dealing is found to have existed. The authorities for this principle are fully set out in the judgment of Mr. Justice Denman in Nevill v. Snelling (15 Ch. D. 679), and I do not think it necessary here to go through them. That case was decided in 1880, and I have not been able to find a later decision which in any way alters the conclusions at which he arrived—conclusions which, I agree, result from the authorities then quoted. On an analogous subject, indeed—namely, that of donations alleged to have been made under undue influence—the case of Allcard v. Skinner (36 Ch. D. 145) may be referred to. In that case, at p. 181, Lord Justice Lindley, in classifying the cases of that kind in which the Court will invalidate the gift, says:—"First there are the cases in which there has been some unfair and improper conduct, some coercion from outside, some overreaching, some form of cheating, and generally, though not always, some personal advantage obtained by a donee placed in some close and confidential relation to the donor." And again, at p. 182, he says:—"What, then, is the principle? Is it that it is right and expedient to save persons from the consequences of their own folly? Or is it that it is right and expedient to save them from being victimized by other people? In my opinion the doctrine of undue influence is founded upon the second of these two principles. Courts of equity have never set aside gifts on the ground of the folly, imprudence, or want of foresight on the part of donors; the Courts have always repudiated any such jurisdiction. Huguenin v. Bailey (14 Ves. 273) is itself a clear authority to this effect. It would obviously be to encourage folly, recklessness, extravagance, and vice if persons could get back property which they foolishly made away with, whether by giving it to charitable institutions or by bestowing it on less worthy objects. On the other hand, to protect people from being forced, tricked, or misled in any way by others into parting with their property is one of the most legitimate objects of all laws." That case, no doubt, is not in point on the present occasion, but it was decided upon a subject analogous to this—Lord Aylesford v. Morris (8 Ch. App. at p. 491)—and it shows that in the setting aside of gifts, as also in relieving from bargains for the repayment of loans, equity considers not improvidence, folly, and imprudence, but unfairness, overreaching, or coercion to constitute a proper ground for its interference. Thus it seems to me clear that this case is not one of those in which a Court of equity would have interfered. The Defendant was not overreached, nor was advantage taken of his necessities. He exercised his own volition and he made terms. The bargain was improvident and foolish, but no pressure was put upon him which can be called undue or unfair. Therefore he would not have obtained relief in a Court of equity apart from the recent statute. But it was contended that this Act of Parliament has altered and extended the rule previously laid down by the Courts. First it was said that some amendment was intended because of the very title of the Act—"An Act to amend the law with respect to persons carrying on business as money-lenders." But there are amendments of the law contained in the Act, even if there were none in this respect, quite sufficient to satisfy the title. It is not necessary to enumerate them; but the registration of money-lenders would be one, and it seems to me that an enactment directing all Courts to apply doctrines peculiar hitherto to Courts of equity is clearly an amending enactment. But, secondly, it was argued that the words themselves of the Act properly bear the meaning contended for. These are (section 1) that where "there is evidence which satisfies the Court that the interest charged in respect of the sum actually lent is excessive . . . or any other charges are excessive, and that in either case the transaction is harsh and unconscionable or is otherwise such that a Court of equity would give relief, the Court may reopen the transaction." In the first place, in order to make the Act applicable, there must be evidence to satisfy the Court either that the interest or that the charges made are excessive; and there must, in the second place, be also evidence that the transaction is harsh and unconscionable or is otherwise such that a Court of equity would give relief. Excessive interest or charges will not of themselves suffice. There must be besides something harsh or unconscionable, or such circumstances as would give rise to a claim for relief from a Court of equity. Mr. Chitty argued that the words "harsh and unconscionable" must be used in a different sense from heretofore because the following words, "or otherwise is such that a Court of equity would give relief," would of themselves include every case in which that Court has hitherto acted; in other words, that the second clause is exclusive of the former and is intended to cover all cases in which such a Court would give relief, while the former clause is intended to include other cases in which hitherto it would not have given relief, and by consequence such a case as the present. Some reliance, in support of this view, was placed on sub-sec. 7 of this same section by which in Scotland this section is to be read as if the words "or is otherwise such that a Court of equity would give relief" were omitted. It was said that unless the words "harsh and unconscionable" were read as suggested, Scotland would reap no benefit from the new law. But sub-sec. 7 was obviously inserted because in Scotland there is no Court of equity as distinguished from the general jurisprudence of the country and it seems to me that it might quite as well be argued that their omission in the case of Scotland is of little importance, because by their insertion in the case of England it was only intended to include some other particular case of relief granted by the Court which could not be classed under the general head of harshness or unconscionability. Such, for instance, was the case of Gordon v. Street (1899, 2 Q. B. 641), which, however, was decided on the ground of fraudulent concealment, the contract having been repudiated as soon as the fraud was discovered. But the sense so contended for does not appear to be the natural sense of the words used, in which sense, if possible, they must be construed. Read in that sense, the section includes all cases where the charges or interest are excessive and where there has been conduct for which, as harsh, unconscionable, or unfair, a Court would give relief. The words from "or otherwise" onwards are, in fact, added to give completeness to the definition. So far as regards England, it was possible and, indeed, desirable to add them; but so far as Scotland is concerned the definition was complete without them.

His LORDSHIP gave judgment for the Plaintiffs for the amount claimed with costs. A stay of execution was asked for, it being mentioned that the Irish Courts had taken a different view of the Act. The learned Judge granted a stay on the terms of the Defendant's giving security.

Mr. Lawson Walton, K. C., and Mr. C. F. Lowenthal for the Plaintiffs.

Mr. T. Willes Chitty for the Defendant.

DIVISIONAL COURT.—In re BETTS. Before JUSTICES WRIGHT and DARLING. 25th March 1901.

Bankruptcy—Where debtor's proceedings are an abuse of the process of the Court.

Ex parte PAINTER (1895, 1 Q. B. 85) followed and explained.

In this case the Registrar of the Brighton County Court following the decision in the above case had held that the mere fact that a debtor having no assets presents his own petition for the express purpose of preventing the application of the debtor's act is not of itself a ground for annulling an adjudication.

Upon this appeal of the Official Receiver, the Court, while admitting the decision in Ex parte Painter to be good law, held that a limit must be placed on the Bankrupt's course of proceedings, and that if his proceedings were a device, an habitual attempt by filing his own petition to frustrate all consequent liability, when orders are made on him on judgment summons, his proceedings amount to an abuse of the process of the Court and should not be countenanced. It was clear on the Registrar's findings that the Bankrupt has been avoiding the payment of his debts. The receiving order must be rescinded.

The debtor appeared in person.

Mr. M. Mackenzie for the Official Receiver.

STANLEY, J.	}	KHETTER NATH MITTER
1901.		v.
4, May.		MANICK LALL SEIT.

Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1885), sec. 372

—Mortgage suit—Assignment of mortgage decree—Sale—Confirmation of sale—Substitution of the name of assignee of decree on the record—Withdrawal of sale-proceeds—Attorney's lien.

This was a mortgage suit in which a decree had been made and the mortgaged properties sold and the sale-proceeds paid into Court. In the meantime the mortgage decree had been assigned to the applicant Girindra Nath Bhose. The assignee of the decree now applied on notice for the substitution of his name in place of the Plaintiff, the assignor.

Mr. A. Chaudhuri for the assignee made the application.

Mr. Sinha for the attorney of the assignor.—I have a lien over the money in Court for costs due to me. So long as notice is given to me before the money is drawn out I do not oppose the application, but I should point out that it is questionable if the Court can now make an order for substitution. Sec. 372, Civ. P. C., does not apply, as there has been a sale which has been confirmed and the suit is at an end.

Mr. Chaudhuri.—The money has still to be drawn out. In mortgage suits the proper parties can be placed on the record until everything which has to be done in connection with the suit has been done. The assignee may be added and not substituted for the assignor.

STANLEY, J.—I think it is a convenient course in a suit like a mortgage suit to place the assignee on the record even after confirmation of the sale, but the name of the judgment-creditor should not be expunged from the record. Let the assignee's name be added and any application for withdrawal of the sale-proceeds must be on notice to the assignor which means notice to his attorney also.

Mr. Sinha asks for the costs of the application.

STANLEY, J.—I will give you liberty to apply on the distribution of the funds for your costs of this application.

Presidency Small Cause Court Act (XV of 1882), sec. 39—Transfer of suit to High Court—Summons, non-service of—Ex parte decree set aside—Application for transfer before the date fixed for re-hearing.

This was an application under sec. 39 of the Presidency Small Cause Court Act for the transfer to the High Court of a suit instituted in the Small Cause Court, Calcutta. The suit was filed in the Small Cause Court on the 12th December 1900. The date fixed by the summons for the appearance of the Defendant was 11th January 1901. The case came on for hearing on the 12th January, and on the Defendant not appearing an ex parte decree was passed in favour of the Plaintiff. On the 9th March the Defendant applied that the decree might be set aside and a new trial granted. On the 10th April the Defendant's application was granted, and it was directed that the case should come on for hearing on the 24th April. The Defendant on the 19th April applied as stated above.

Mr. M. L. Dutt for the applicant.—The summons had never been served on me; I am entitled to make the application because it is not made more than eight days after the service of summons, no summons having in fact been served. The order of the 10th April was equivalent to the service of summons fixing the 24th April as the time for my appearance. I am therefore within time.

Held.—That an application for transfer must be made within 8 days of the service of summons and not at any time not later than 8 days after the service of summons.

That the order of the 10th April cannot be taken as equivalent to the service of summons. Even if the summons was not served, sec. 39 does not enable the Defendant to make this application within the time fixed not by the summons for the appearance of the Defendant but by the Judge for re-hearing the case.

Infant—Application by next friend after attainment of majority by infant.

This was an application on behalf of the Plaintiff by his next friend Mr. Peacock, Receiver of this Court, for an order that the case should be set down for settlement of issues.

Mr. Sinha appeared for the Plaintiff.—There were about thirty Defendants of which thirteen appeared through different attorneys and supported the Plaintiff's application.

Babu Charu Chunder Bose appeared for the Defendant Charu Chunder Pal and opposed the application on the ground that the infant Plaintiff is now of age and the next friend is functus officio and he has no right to take any step whatever in the suit whether of a formal nature or otherwise and referred to secs. 450, 451 and 452 of the C. C. P., Rule 632 of Belchambers' Rules; Simpson on Infants, p. 481; Hare's Reports, Vol. IV, p. 122.

Mr. Sinha in reply referred to I. L. R. 22 Cal. 270; it is a mere irregularity and the Plaintiff is now willing to adopt the application and should be allowed to go on with the suit and make the application on his own account.

The Court held that the application was irregular and should be dismissed.

Partition—Commission of partition, return of—Exceptions—Time for filing, extension of—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1885), sec. 396—Belchambers' Rules and Orders (2nd Ed.), Rule 615.

This was an application by two of the Defendants in the above suit for three weeks' further time to file their exceptions to the return of the commissioner of partition. This was a suit for partition in which the usual partition decree was made on the 30th July 1900. The commissioner of partition made his return and filed the same on the 12th February, 1901. Two of the Defendants were desirous of filing exceptions to the report, but as they could not get their affidavits ready within the 14 days allowed by the rules to file exceptions, they now applied for three weeks' further time.

Babu Pramath Chandra Kar for the applicants pointed out that there was no express provision for filing exceptions to the return of a commission, but that the Civil Procedure Code and the Rules of Court did not make any distinction between the return of a commission and certificates and reports of officers, though in practice there was some difference in the procedure in getting a return of commission and a certificate or report of an officer confirmed. See Norotum v. Harichand (L. R. 13 Bom. 368). He therefore made this application within the time allowed by Rule 615 of Belchambers' Rules and Orders.

THE COURT granted the application.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), secs. 133, 139—Public nuisance—Prostitutes, trade and occupation of—Removal of houses from road side, order for—"Physical comfort" of the public—Jury, opinion of.

This was a reference made by B. R. Mullick, Esq., Sessions Judge of Tippera, on the 20th April 1901, under sec. 438, Cr. P. Code, against the order of J. Vas, Esq., Assistant Magistrate of Chandpore, dated the 28th February 1901.

The facts of the case appear from the letter of reference which was as follows:—

"By an order, dated the 17th of January, the Sub-divisional Magistrate of Chandpore, in consequence of a police-report, directed a number of prostitutes to remove their 'trade and occupation' from the slopes and neighbourhood of the Bagadi Road, which, I understand, is within Chandpur town. At the request of the prostitutes a jury was appointed, three members being nominated by the Sub-divisional Magistrate and two by the prostitutes themselves. On the 28th of February the jury submitted their report and on the same day the Sub-divisional Magistrate made his order of the 17th of January absolute under sec. 139, Cr. P. Code. Against this order the prostitutes, the Petitioners, invoke the revisional powers of the Hon'ble High Court."

"It is recommended that the whole order be set aside, being bad in law."

"The Sub-divisional officer says that the houses of the prostitutes on the road side, interfere with the 'physical comfort' of the public. Three members of the jury report, as the result of their enquiries, that the prostitutes sometimes quarrel in their houses under the influence of liquor and sometimes sit on the road, and suggest that they should be directed to mend their habits; the other two members deny that there is any cause for removing them at all. The report of the majority on which the Sub-divisional Magistrate has based his final order does not recommend that the Petitioners should remove their houses and I think the order of the Magistrate was neither reasonable nor proper nor legal. If the prostitutes commit affrays on the public road or disturb people at night by their songs they can be dealt with under the Penal Code. Ordering them to remove their houses does not appear to me to be a reasonable or legal remedy."

The Court in upholding the reference observed that the mere existence of houses of prostitutes by the road side and the fact that they ply their trade in those houses cannot affect the "physical comfort" of the passers-by.

That the jury, not having recommended the removal of the houses the Magistrate could not, acting upon the report of the jury, reasonably and legally make his "conditional order" for removal of the houses, absolute.

No one appeared on this reference.

One Mohesh Chandra Maiti and others alleging themselves to be clerks of pleaders practising in the Munsif's Court at Contai in the district or Midnapur applied to the 2nd Munsif of Contai for declaring 33 persons including the Petitioners, as touts within the meaning of the Legal Practitioners Act. The Munsif referred the matter to the District Judge. Thereupon the learned District Judge asked the Munsif to enquire into and report on the matter to him, desiring at the same time, that the report should embody the opinion of all the Munsifs. Accordingly the learned Munsif, without giving any notice to the parties concerned and in the absence of all but two of the persons against whom proceedings were initiated, took down the statements of several pleaders practising there not, however, on oath or solemn affirmation, and submitted the same to the District Judge along with a report signed by all the three Munsifs in which they recommended 26 persons including the Petitioners to be declared as touts. Thereupon these 26 persons were called upon by the District Judge to show cause before him why their names should not be included in the list of touts under sec. 36 of the Legal Practitioners Act. In showing cause they submitted that they were not touts within the meaning of the Act, that they were pleaders' clerks and that there was no legal evidence before the Judge on which he could be satisfied that they were touts. The learned District Judge, however, overruled these objections and relying on the Munsif's report and the statements on which it was based, declared 16 persons, of whom 15 are the present Petitioners, to be touts, and directed their names to be included in the list of touts and published as such.

Against this order of the District Judge the Petitioners moved this Court and obtained these rules calling upon the District Judge to shew cause why the order should not be set aside, on the ground, inter alia, that there was no legal evidence before the learned Judge on which he could act under sec. 36 of the Legal Practitioners Act. On the rule coming on for hearing, no cause was shewn and it was Held—That although the enquiry was made by a judicial officer, still he was not an officer having jurisdiction in the matter under sec. 36 nor was he appointed by the District Judge to take evidence on that behalf.

Held also—Under the facts and circumstances set forth above, that there was no legal evidence before the learned District Judge on which he could act, that before taking action under sec. 36 of the Legal Practitioners Act, the Judge must be satisfied on legal evidence, that the persons are touts and the order of the District Judge based on the Munsif's report and the statements taken by them are bad in law and ought to be set aside, in re Siddeshwar Boral (4 C. GUPTA, J.

	v.	DURGA PERSHAD SINGH, Judgment-debtor, Respondent.

Mortgage decree, construction of—Interest—Date of payment, meaning of.

This appeal arose out of an application for execution of a mortgage decree. The question was what was the meaning of the words 'date of payment,' as to whether they mean 'the date of actual payment,' or 'the last day fixed for the payment' in the decree. The portion of the decree material to this report was in the following words:—". . . . It is ordered and decreed that this suit be decreed with costs, the Plaintiff do recover the sum of Rs. 1,118 principal with interest at the rate mentioned in the bond at Rs. 2 per cent. per mensem from the date of the suit, till the date of payment and the interest claimed by him, and costs with interest at Rs. 6 per cent. per annum; and it is further ordered and decreed that if all the Defendants or any one of them pay the said amount of decretal money and interest and costs within six months from this date, then the Plaintiff shall give back to the Defendant or Defendants the mortgage bond. . . . . " The decree was passed on the 16th July 1896.

The first Court held that the words 'date of payment' meant the 'date of realisation,' and therefore interest should run up to the date of realisation.

The District Judge, on appeal, took a contrary view and held that interest should run up to the date of the order making the decree absolute up to the 16th January 1897.

On second appeal by the decree-holder it was Held—That there is nothing in the law to prevent interest at the rate stipulated on the bond being decreed up to the date of actual payment and that the 'date of payment' meant the date of actual payment and not the last day fixed for payment in the decree.

REPORTS (See Index.)

THE BIRTHDAY OF HER LATE MAJESTY THE QUEEN-Empress was declared a public holiday under the Negotiable Instruments Act and all Law Courts and public offices remained closed on the 24th of May last, under orders from the Government of India.

THE JUDICIAL COMMITTEE OF THE PRIVY COUNCIL, which resumed its sittings on the 1st of May last, had only fifteen cases on the list, out of them nine were from India, and five from the Colonies and one from a consular Court. Of these, three were from Bengal, two from Rangoon, two from Oudh, one from Bombay, none from Madras, one from Allahabad; two from New South Wales, and one each from Ceylon, Constantinople, Malta and Victoria.

THERE WERE ONLY THREE CASES WHICH CAME UP for judgment which had been reserved. Two of these were Indian appeals, one having been heard in February last and another in March. We cannot certainly complain of delay on this count. But New Zealand was less fortunate, from where came the third case and in which judgment had been reserved for a year.

THE HOUSE OF LORDS AS A COURT OF FINAL APPEAL does not compare favourably with the Judicial Committee, so far at least as progress is concerned. Of the 26 appeals in the present list, 17 came over from the last session. Before Easter, the Law Lords seem to have done little business as of the 21 cases then on the list, only four were disposed of.

THE QUESTION OF THE SUPPRESSION OF NAMES IN the course of judicial proceedings seems to be giving rise to conflicting views amongst His Majesty's judges in England. In the Divorce Court a doctor's wife petitioned for judicial separation from her husband on the ground of his misconduct with "a young lady of good family." The allegations were proved without naming the young lady in open Court and the President allowed the hearing to proceed without mentioning names. This departure from the ordinary practice has been objected to in the public press. This may be very considerate to the lady concerned, but the worst of it is that persons not at all connected with the proceedings may sometimes be suspected of being concerned in them. The Master of Rolls, however, does not seem to approve of the practice. On the 26th of April, counsel applied before the Master of the Rolls for leave to appeal from an order by Mr. Justice Day in Chambers dismissing an appeal as frivolous and vexatious. The action was for libel conveyed in a letter written by solicitors on behalf of their client and the counsel for the Plaintiff in making the application handed up the letter to the Bench saying that he would not mention the names. The Master of the Rolls observed "I strongly object to that. It seems to be getting rather common. This is a public Court of Justice, and I entirely disapprove of names being suppressed."

INSANITY AS AN EXCUSE FOR CRIME.

The provision in the Penal Code with regard to insanity as an excuse for crime was evidently adopted from the opinion recorded by English judges at the instance of the House of Lords and as a sequel to M'Naghten's case (see infra). Under sec. 84 of the Indian Penal Code, insanity is a defence, if only it is proved that a person at the time of committing an offence was "incapable of knowing the nature of the act, or that he was doing what was either wrong or contrary to law." This section has from time to time come up for interpretation in the different High Courts in India, and they have interpreted it strictly, and it seems to us somewhat rigorously. We shall take the leading cases of the principal High Courts and notice them in their chronological order. In the case of Queen-Empress v. Lakshman (I. L. R. 10 Bom. 512) it was found that the accused was suffering from fever, that he was bhramist अतिभ्रम (bewildered or literally subject to delusion) and even at times unconscious. The fever had made him irritable and sensitive to sound and at a time when he was ill with ague, the children began to cry and this vexed him and he killed two of his young children with a hatchet and after killing them went to bed and fell asleep. He surrendered himself to the Police, made a confession before a Magistrate, showed no sign of sorrow or remorse, made no attempt at concealment and his manners were quiet when he was questioned. He had no motive in killing his own children and was said to be very fond of them. But Birdwood and Jardine, JJ., held that "there was not sufficient evidence to warrant their Lordships holding that he was not conscious of the nature of the act. If he was conscious of the nature of the act he must be presumed to be conscious of its criminality." Accordingly the judges convicted the accused of culpable homicide and sentenced him to transportation for life, but submitted the case to the Governor-General in Council for any reduction of sentence at their discretion. It is hardly possible to furnish a more striking instance of such an act having been committed under an "insane impulse." But we cannot take any exception to the decision in this case, since nothing but an incapacity to comprehend the nature of the act or to judge between right and wrong is an excuse under the Indian Penal Code. This interpretation of the law was followed by the Madras High Court in the case of Queen-Empress v. Vankatu (I. L. R. 12 Mad. 459). In this case the accused killed a child (his sister-in-law) with a sword. He was suffering from fever with enlargement of spleen and want of food, general weakness of his body and irritability of mind. He had been in the habit of treating the child kindly and affectionately, and there was no motive for his attack on her. The attack was made before other persons and he persisted in it in their presence. The medical evidence was that "the act was committed under a sudden attack of homicidal mania." Sir Arthur Collins, C. J., and Muttusami Ayyar, J., however, held, agreeing with the Bombay High Court, that as there was no positive evidence that the act was committed in a fit of delirium or that the accused was unconscious of the nature of the act, they could not judicially find that the Appellant did not know that what he was doing was wrong within the meaning of sec. 84 of the Indian Penal Code. They commuted the sentence of death to one for transportation for life and as for any further reduction referred the case to the Viceroy in Council. There can hardly be any difference of opinion that this was as hard a case as the one in Bombay, and that the standard of mental aberration required by the Penal Code to disprove criminal responsibility is cruel, antiquated and unreasonable. But still so long as it is the law of the land the judges can but conform to it. It is because of this that O'Kinealy and Banerjee, JJ., upheld the conviction for murder in the case of Queen-Empress v. Kader (I. L. R. 23 Cal. 604). In this case the accused had been suffering from mental derangement for some months previous to the occurrence and since the destruction of his house and property by fire. He used to neglect his house and field work, play with children much more than was expected of a man of his age, complain of pain in the head which was occasionally severe and then he would not answer questions or speak and on one occasion he was seen eating potsherds. One day he suddenly killed a child of eight who was left alone in his company by its father, tried to conceal the corpse in a deserted house not far off and hid himself in a jungle close by. He had no enmity with the father, was fond of the child and had no sane motive in killing the boy. The learned judges held that even if the accused had acted under an insane impulse, since he seems to have been aware of the nature of the act and that it was wrong or contrary to law, he was responsible for the act under sec. 84 of the Indian Penal Code. If this be the law is it not time that the law should be altered? In this connection, however, the case of Private Sullivan tried at the Calcutta Sessions, which has just closed, is hardly worthy of consideration. The issue it raises is not so much the criminal responsibility of the accused as it is the moral responsibility of those who may be responsible for the verdict. But with this we are not here concerned. It will be evident from the cases mentioned above that the mere fact of the accused having shot the master-tailor dead and his telling the Provost Sergeant and others of what he had done and his surrendering himself on that account would put out of Court any plea of unsoundness of mind under sec. 84 of the Indian Penal Code. Even looking at it from the point of view, not of what the law is but what it should be, we do not think it would come within the class of cases on account of which we say that the law should be amended. In this case the prisoner had a grudge against the deceased who had once complained against him and had got him fourteen days' hard labour. Although this was some months before the act yet it was in evidence that he had mentioned to a comrade that the master-tailor would never again complain and immediately after the act he gave as his reason that the tailor had got him fourteen days' cells. The Major of his regiment who is in the habit of daily inspecting his men said that he never noticed any peculiarity about the prisoner and that he was intelligent and would not give any trouble for months and then when he gave any it was drink, the resisting of an escort or the like. The plea of "insane impulse" does not apply to such cases.

Those who have not given much thought to the question of criminal responsibility are apt to confuse between "insanity," "insane impulse" and "criminal nature" and in coming to talk of them mix up the three. The question of "insane impulse" and "criminal nature" have, however, a common foundation in the modern theory of crime.

The observation and study of criminals tend to shew that crime is, perhaps, the result of diseased or defective nature. A normal mind has all the ordinary human passions, but it has also a control over them all. Irritation, anger, wrath, hatred, jealousy, a desire to possess or to deprive others, greed, lust, etc., are very common passions of the inferior order. But a normal man in a well-ordered society can hold them all in check. But there are individuals who lack the control over one on more of these passions and commit acts offensive or dangerous to their neighbours and then such acts are characterised as crime and such individuals, as criminals. But the distinction between a criminal and an insane person is this, that the former is in possession of his faculties and preserves ordinarily a balance of mind, while the latter, neither. A criminal knows the nature of the act and can discriminate between right and wrong and that is, perhaps, why the Penal Code has made this the test of criminal culpability. But consistently with such knowledge or discrimination it is possible, as in the first three cases cited above, that a person in a state of physical or mental weakness or distress, brought on by disease or calamity may, through an insignificant cause, lose his mental balance altogether and may be subject to a momentary impulse which for the time gets the upper hand over all his faculties and makes him lose all control over his actions. A crime committed under such circumstances would be attributed to "insane impulse." But from what we have said it is clear that an individual who ordinarily allows his passions to get the better of him, although it may be from a defective nature, is yet a criminal and every civilized community considers it a part of its duty to keep him in check for the sake of safety to society and also for his personal reclamation. There can therefore be no mistake between a "criminal nature" and an "insane impulse." To make one criminally responsible for acts committed under such irresponsible impulse seems somewhat inhuman. Such ideas of criminal culpability are already obsolete in the United States and we are glad to notice that the more humane doctrine is also gaining ground in the British Colonies. The Queensland Criminal Code of 1899 (63 Vic. IX) sec. 29 provides that "a person is not criminally responsible for an act or omission if at the time of doing the act or making the omission he is in such a state of mental disease or natural mental infirmity as to deprive him . . . of capacity to control his action." It is remarkable that even if the law were as it should be, it is only the first three cases that would be covered by it but not Sullivan's case. The English law on the subject is summed up in M'Naghten's case (10 C. & F. 200). But as a report of it is not accessible to many in this country we reproduce the material portion of it below.

DANIEL M'NAGHTEN'S CASE.

(10 Cl. & F. 200.)

In this case the prisoner was indicted for having on the 20th day of January 1843, in the parish of St. Martin in the county of Middlesex and within the jurisdiction of the Central Criminal Court, shot with a pistol Edward Drummond on his back inflicting a mortal wound from the effects of which he died. The prisoner was charged with murder but pleaded not guilty. The report after stating the above facts proceeds as follows:—

Evidence having been given of the fact of the shooting of Mr. Drummond, and of his death in consequence thereof, witnesses were called on the part of the prisoner, to prove that he was not, at the time of committing the act, in a sound state of mind. The medical evidence was in substance this: That persons of otherwise sound mind, might be affected by morbid delusions: that the prisoner was in that condition, that a person so labouring under a morbid delusion, might have a moral perception of right and wrong, but that in the case of the prisoner it was a delusion which carried him away beyond the power of his own control, and left him no such perception; and that he was not capable of exercising any control over acts which had connexion with his delusion: that it was of the nature of the disease with which the prisoner was affected, to go on gradually until it had reached a climax, when it burst forth with irresistible intensity: that a man might go on for years quietly, though at the same time under its influence, but would all at once break out into the most extravagant and violent paroxysms.

Some of the witnesses who gave this evidence, had previously examined the prisoner: others had never seen him till he appeared in Court, and they formed their opinions on hearing the evidence given by the other witnesses.

Lord Chief Justice Tindal (in his charge):—The question to be determined is, whether at the time the act in question was committed, the prisoner had or had not the use of his understanding, so as to know that he was doing a wrong or wicked act. If the jurors should be of opinion that the prisoner was not sensible, at the time he committed it, that he was violating the laws both of God and man, then he would be entitled to a verdict in his favour; but if, on the contrary, they were of opinion that when he committed the act he was in a sound state of mind, then their verdict must be against him.

Verdict, Not guilty, on the ground of insanity.

This verdict, and the question of the nature and extent of the unsoundness of mind which would excuse the commission of a felony of this sort, having been made the subject of debate in the House of Lords (The 6th and 13th March 1843; see Hansard's Debates, vol. 67, pp. 288, 714) it was determined to take the opinion of the Judges on the law governing such cases. Accordingly, on the 26th of May, all the Judges attended their Lordships, but no questions were then put.

On the 19th of June, the Judges again attended the House of Lords; when (no argument having been had) the following questions of law were propounded to them:—

1st. What is the law respecting alleged crimes committed by persons afflicted with insane delusion, in respect of one or more particular subjects or persons: as, for instance, where at the time of the commission of the alleged crime, the accused knew he was acting contrary to law, but did the act complained of with a view, under the influence of insane delusion, of redressing or revenging some supposed grievance or injury, or of producing some supposed public benefit?

2nd. What are the proper questions to be submitted to the jury, when a person alleged to be afflicted with insane delusion respecting one or more particular subjects or persons, is charged with the commission of a crime (murder, for example), and insanity is set up as a defence?

3rd. In what terms ought the question to be left to the jury, as to the prisoner's state of mind at the time when the act was committed?

4th. If a person under an insane delusion as to existing facts, commits an offence in consequence thereof, is he thereby excused?

5th. Can a medical man conversant with the disease of insanity, who never saw the prisoner previously to the trial, but who was present during the whole trial and the examination of all the witnesses, be asked his opinion as to the state of the prisoner's mind at the time of the commission of the alleged crime, or his opinion whether the prisoner was conscious at the time of doing the act, that he was acting contrary to law, or whether he was labouring under any and what delusion at the time?

LORD CHIEF JUSTICE TINDAL:—The first question proposed by your Lordships is this: "What is the law respecting alleged crimes committed by persons afflicted with insane delusion in respect of one or more particular subjects or persons: as, for instance, where at the time of the commission of the alleged crime the accused knew he was acting contrary to law, but did the act complained of with a view, under the influence of insane delusion, of redressing or revenging some supposed grievance or injury, or of producing some supposed public benefit?"

In answer to which question, assuming that your Lordships' inquiries are confined to those persons who labour under such partial delusions only, and are not in other respects insane, we are of opinion that, notwithstanding the party accused did the act complained of with a view, under the influence of insane delusion, of redressing or revenging some supposed grievance or injury, or of producing some public benefit, he is nevertheless punishable according to the nature of the crime committed, if he knew at the time of committing such crime that he was acting contrary to law; by which expression we understand your Lordships to mean the law of the land.

Your Lordships are pleased to inquire of us, secondly, "What are the proper questions to be submitted to the jury, where a person alleged to be afflicted with insane delusion respecting one or more particular subjects or persons, is charged with the commission of a crime (murder, for example), and insanity is set up as a defence?" And, thirdly, "In what terms ought the question to be left to the jury as to the prisoner's state of mind at the time when the act was committed?" And as these two questions appear to us to be more conveniently answered together, we have to submit our opinion to be, that the jurors ought to be told in all cases that every man is to be presumed to be sane, and to possess a sufficient degree of reason to be responsible for his crimes, until the contrary be proved to their satisfaction; and that to establish a defence on the ground of insanity, it must be clearly proved that, at the time of the committing of the act, the party accused was labouring under such a defect of reason, from disease of the mind, as not to know the nature and quality of the act he was doing; or, if he did know it, that he did not know he was doing what was wrong. The mode of putting the latter part of the question to the jury on these occasions has generally been, whether the accused at the time of doing the act knew the difference between right and wrong: which mode, though rarely, if ever, leading to any mistake with the jury, is not, as we conceive, so accurate when put generally and in the abstract, as when put with reference to the party's knowledge of right and wrong in respect to the very act with which he is charged. If the question were to be put as to the knowledge of the accused solely and exclusively with reference to the law of the land, it might tend to confound the jury, by inducing them to believe that an actual knowledge of the law of the land was essential in order to lead to a conviction; whereas the law is administered upon the principle that every one must be taken conclusively to know it, without proof that he does know it. If the accused was conscious that the act was one which he ought not to do, and if that act was at the same time contrary to the law of the land, he is punishable; and the usual course therefore has been to leave the question to the jury, whether the party accused had a sufficient degree of reason to know that he was doing an act that was wrong; and this course we think is correct, accompanied with such observations and explanations as the circumstances of each particular case may require.

The fourth question which your Lordships have proposed to us is this:—"If a person under an insane delusion as to existing facts, commits an offence in consequence thereof, is he thereby excused?" To which question the answer must of course depend on the nature of the delusion: but, making the same assumption as we did before, namely, that he labours under such partial delusion only, and is not in other respects insane, we think he must be considered in the same situation as to responsibility as if the facts with respect to which the delusion exists were real. For example, if under the influence of his delusion he supposes another man to be in the act of attempting to take away his life, and he kills that man, as he supposes, in self-defence, he would be exempt from punishment. If his delusion was that the deceased had inflicted a serious injury to his character and fortune, and he killed him in revenge for such supposed injury, he would be liable to punishment.

The question lastly proposed by your Lordships is:—"Can a medical man conversant with the disease of insanity, who never saw the prisoner previously to the trial, but who was present during the whole trial and the examination of all the witnesses, be asked his opinion as to the state of the prisoner's mind at the time of the commission of the alleged crime, or his opinion whether the prisoner was conscious at the time of doing the act that he was acting contrary to law, or whether he was labouring under any and what delusion at the time?" In answer thereto, we state to your Lordships, that we think the medical man, under the circumstances supposed, cannot in strictness be asked his opinion in the terms above stated, because each of those questions involves the determination of the truth of the facts deposed to, which it is for the jury to decide, and the questions are not mere questions upon a matter of science, in which case such evidence is admissible. But where the facts are admitted or not disputed, and the question becomes substantially one of science only, it may be convenient to allow the question to be put in that general form, though the same cannot be insisted on as a matter of right.

MR. JUSTICE MAULE expressed similar opinion in a separate judgment, and LORD BROUGHAM, LORD CAMPBELL, LORD COTTENHAM, LORD WYNFORD and the LORD CHANCELLOR LYNDHURST, all concurred as to the right of the House to have the opinion of the Judges recorded on such abstract questions of existing law.

THE CODE OF CRIMINAL PROCEDURE, BEING ACT V OF 1898, AS AMENDED BY ACTS X OF 1899 AND VI OF 1900. By C. H. Sohoni, Pleader, District Court, Poona, and Political Agent's Court, S. M. C. Fifth Edition, revised and enlarged. Price, Rs. 14. Printed by Messrs. Addison and Co., 1901.

This is a new and improved edition of Mr. Sohoni's Code. The author has, in the present work, generally adhered to the arrangement of the notes in the previous edition of his work. The notes are methodically arranged under each section with numbered paragraphs. The subject dealt with in each paragraph is printed in bold type which brings it prominently to the notice of the reader and affords facility for ready reference. In the present edition the notes have been brought up to date. A new feature of this edition is that the corresponding sections of the old Codes (Acts X of 1872 and XXV of 1861) have been given below the marginal notes. This increases the bulk of the volume by nearly 300 pages and, no doubt, adds to its usefulness. Evidently the author has spared no pains to make the notes exhaustive and accurate. Still in a work of this nature it is not possible to avoid omissions. We may point out that some of the latest decisions have been missed out and that in some instances cases noted under one sections have not been mentioned under another although, perhaps, more appropriately they come under the latter. For instance, we find the author has, in noticing the cases under sec. 436, referred to Opoorba Kumar v. Probodh Kumari (1 C. W. N. 49, 1897), but has omitted to refer to the other cases on the point under that section. It may be too much to expect of the author to incorporate in the present edition the latest Full Bench ruling on the subject, but not so Dolegobind Das (5 C. W. N. 169). Then again the author has referred to the case of Opoorba Kumar v. Probodh Kumari under sec. 436, but he omits to refer to it as also those mentioned above under sec. 437, although he mentions two other cases, viz., of Charoobala Debi (3 C. W. N. 601) and Colville v. Kristo Kishore (3 C. W. N. 598) thereunder. We may also mention that the notes under sec. 403 in Ch. XXX relating to previous acquittals or convictions might have been a little more comprehensive. The notes under other important sections of the Code, such as secs. 133, 144, 145, 195, 234, 423, 435, 439, etc., have been very carefully compiled and placed under appropriate head-notes. But the annotations throughout are more in the style of a classified digest than in that of an analytical treatise on the law of Criminal Procedure. The author has taken care to correct inaccuracies which crept into his previous edition in indicating the alterations in the new Code and further he has added to their value by indicating what cases such alterations have had the effect of superseding. The table of cases cited and the index are both exhaustive. The addition of a supplement giving such Acts as require frequent reference, such as those relating to Evidence, Reformatory Schools, Cattle-trespass, Breaches of Contract, Whipping, Oaths, Bankers' Books, Police and Gambling, adds to the usefulness of the work. The get-up of the work is also commendable.

COURT OF APPEAL.—DOWLING v. DODDS. Before the MASTER OF THE ROLLS, LORDS JUSTICES COLLINS and STIRLING. 6th November 1900.

Libel—Privileged occasion—Onus—Express malice—Verdict.

This was an appeal by Dr. Ferdinand Dodds, the Defendant, seeking to have judgment for £100 awarded by jury to Plaintiff set aside.

Dr. Dodds had written to the Relieving officer of the Paddington District intimating that Plaintiff was suffering from hallucinations and was not a fit person to dispense medicine in the district. Plaintiff was a professional nurse residing in the district. The action was based on that letter as a libel. Investigation by the local authorities was made as to Plaintiff's state of mind, but the matter ended with the enquiry. Mr. Justice Darling had found the occasion privileged, but he allowed the matter to go to the jury, who found that Defendant had not acted with an honest motive, in writing the letter, but maliciously.

The COURT OF APPEAL unanimously held that the finding, that the occasion was privileged, was sound, that being so the onus was on Plaintiff to prove that Defendant had acted malà fide, with a sinister motive, but there was no evidence of express malice. There was no evidence at all on which the jury could find that the justification was not made out. The Plaintiff's mind was unhunged. Judgment must therefore be entered for Defendant with costs of both Courts.

Mr. Stuart Bevan for the Plaintiff.

CHANCERY COURT.—DEVERGES v. SANDEMAN CLARKE & Co. Before MR. JUSTICE FARWELL. 15th November 1900.

Mortgages of stock—Power of sale—Reasonable time—Implied power.

TUCKER v. WILSON (1 P. W. 261) followed.

This action was commenced by the Plaintiff against Messrs. Sandeman Clarke & Co., stock and share broker, under the following circumstances:—The Defendants bought at the stock exchange in July 1897, 700 shares in the Central Boulder Gold Mines of Australia at Plaintiff's desire. Only a portion of the purchase-money was paid by Plaintiff; the balance of £538 were paid by Defendants on Plaintiff's behalf. On Plaintiff's verbal request the Defendants, at the following, stock exchange settlement day had the shares transferred into the names of two members of their firm to be held by them for and on behalf of Plaintiff. In August 1897, Defendants wrote Plaintiff asking him to remit the balance due together with interest on the accommodation they had made and notifying to him that, if amount was not remitted before next settlement, they reserved to themselves the right to sell the shares at the then market quotation. No answer was received to such letter, during the next month the company went into liquidation for the purpose of reconstruction, which was carried out on the basis of each shareholder paying 3/ per share. Plaintiff was informed of that; he took no steps whatever to secure shares in the new company. Defendants paid the 3/ per share, and the allotment of the new shares was made to them. In July 1899 Plaintiff applied to Defendants for an account which Defendants rendered showing due to them £595, at the same time communicating to Plaintiff the fact that he had forfeited all right to any interest in the company by his failure to comply with the terms of the reconstruction scheme. Plaintiff replied that the sale was an improper one, without notice to him, whereby he was a loser owing to the shares having appreciated in value. Defendants, although claiming the shares, submitted an account showing £55 due to Plaintiff which they brought into Court in full satisfaction of the claim.

The question was whether Plaintiff's contention that the sale was altogether wrong was sound.

The learned Judge held that it was not, he quoted with approval the following passage from Coots on Mortgages (by Robbins, p. 275) which was based on the above quoted case:—"Express powers were not formerly necessary in mortgages of stock or in instruments of defeasance executed by the transferee; nor need a mortgagee of stock now rely on his statutory power in order to realize his security by sale. If stock itself is made the security for money, and the day for payment is passed, the mortgagee may at once proceed to sell the stock and repay himself principal and interest without any authority from the mortgagor and without commencing an action for foreclosure." The Court said a reasonable time had elapsed. The letter of August 1897 was sufficient to give Defendants power of sale, indeed the agreement between the parties gave Defendants an implied power of sale. The action consequently failed.

Mr. Wallace, Q. C., and Mr. Studfield for the Plaintiff.

Mr. Upjohn, Q. C., and Mr. S. Smith for the Defendants.

CHANCERY DIVISION.—FOSTER v. NEW TRINIDAD LAKE ASPHALTE COMPANY, LIMITED. Before MR. JUSTICE BYRNE. 27th November 1900.

Company law—Unexpected appreciation of profits—Dividends—Divisibility among shareholders—What is capital.

VERNER v. GENERAL AND COMMERCIAL INVESTMENT TRUST (1894, 2 Ch., see p. 265) followed.

The facts were these:—The old Trinidad Asphalt Company (an American concern) in 1894 secured among other things a debt of 100,000 dollars due from the New York and Bermudez Company secured by promissory notes. In 1897 the abovenamed Defendant Company, an English Company, purchased the property and assets of the old Trinidad Asphalt Company including the said debt due, and thereupon in December 1899 obtained from the New York and Bermudez Company new promissory notes for 127,000 dollars, the 27,000 being accrued interest. This debt of 127,000 dollars has recently been paid off. The directors of the abovenamed Defendant Company proposed distributing that amount among its shareholders. There is no dispute as to the 27,000 interest, but the debenture-holders of the Defendant Company objected to the distribution of the principal amount of 100,000 dollars or somewhat over £26,000 and by this application sought to restrain that being done. The question for determination was whether or not that amount may be distributed as profit with regard to the present value of the total capital assets, and whatever the result of the year's trading may be. The learned Judge in his judgment says that the amount of this debt is a distinct item of the property purchased which has since been realized by payment, it is prima facie capital, and there is nothing to show that it had changed its character, because it has turned out to be of greater value than had been expected. An injunction would be granted until judgment or further order restraining the directors from distributing the 100,000 dollars as dividend without reference to the other business or assets of the Defendant Company. In doing so, the Court was not deciding that such sum may not properly be brought into profit and loss account, or be taken into account in ascertaining the amount available for dividend. That would depend upon the result of the whole account for the year. It was clear that an appreciation in total value of capital assets if duly realized by sale or getting in of some portion of such assets may in a proper case be treated as available for purposes of dividend. "Capital" in the case above referred to is said to be "money subscribed" pursuant to the memorandum of association or what is represented by that money." That decision would show that what is capital available for dividend depends upon the result of the whole accounts fairly taken for the whole year, capital, as well as profit and loss.

Mr. Malligan, Q. C., and Mr. Stirling for the Defendants.

Suit to set aside sale in execution—Fraud—Ex parte decree, refusal to set aside—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), sec. 108.

This was an appeal from a decision of the Calcutta High Court (Macpherson and Ameer Ali, JJ.), reversing the decree of the Sub-Judge of Pubna.

The object of the suit brought by the Respondent,

Pran Nath Roy, as Plaintiff, was to set aside an ex parte decree for rent obtained by the 1st and 2nd Defendants against the 7th Defendant Ram Krishna Sircar, and the Plaintiff, and to recover from Defendants 3rd, 4th, and 5th (i.e., the Appellants) possession of a property (village Dogachi) belonging to Plaintiff which was sold in execution of that decree, and purchased by them in the name of Defendant No. 6, Nawadip.

The Plaintiff's case was that the suit culminating in that sale was from first to last a fraud in which the Defendants who purchased were concerned.

The Appellants filed written statements in which besides objecting on the merits, it was pleaded that the Plaintiff having attempted unsuccessfully to set aside the ex parte decree under sec. 108, C. P. C., and the execution under sec. 311 and not having appealed therefrom could not bring the present suit.

The Sub-Judge summarily dismissed the suit as not maintainable in consequence of the proceedings under sec. 108.

On appeal the High Court held that the suit was maintainable, and they remanded the cause for decision on the merits. In their judgment reference is made to Abdool Moosomdar's case (I. L. R. 21 Cal. 605) as an authority that a suit will lie to set aside an ex parte fraudulent decree although no endeavour has been made to set it aside under sec. 108, C. P. C. They also refer to Raj Kishore Mookerjee's case (17 W. R. 413) as cited by the Appellants before them. They say the ground on which the Court decided that case was not clear, the judgment did not allude to fraud as the foundation of the suit, any how it was no authority for the proposition that a person failing to obtain relief under sec. 108 is debarred from bringing a suit based on fraud and that case apparently conflicted with the one in 21 Calcutta Series.

Mr. Mayne for Appellants relied on sec. 108 and the proceedings that took place on that application.

Respondent was not represented.

LORD HOBHOUSE at the conclusion of Mr. Mayne's argument decided that the High Court had taken the right view of the case and dismissed the appeal advising His Majesty to that effect.

GUPTA, J.		Opposite Party, Appellants,
1901.		v.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), sec. 158, cl. (d)—Application to determine incidents of tenancy Scope of section—Assessment of additional rent for excess land held by tenant—Jurisdiction.

The Respondent, who was the landlord, made an application to the Munsif of Madhubani under sec. 158 of the Bengal Tenancy Act for determining the incidents of the tenancy of the present Appellants and, inter alia, prayed for determining the actual quantity of lands held by the tenants and the rents payable by them at the time of the application. It was an admitted fact that the holding was recorded in the landlord's seristha as consisting of 40 bighas 15 cottahs of land held at an annual rental of Rs. 109-8-4 and it was contended by the tenants that the lands comprised in their holding could not be measured, and that, at any rate, the rent payable by them, could not be altered; their objections were, however, overruled, and it was found on measurement that the holding consisted of 70 bighas 14 cottahs of lands, and the learned Munsif assessed additional rent for the excess lands thus found, at the original rate and found that the rent payable by the opposite party was Rs. 190-0-1. On appeal, the Subordinate Judge of Durbhanga affirmed the decision of the Munsif, and the opposite party, tenants, preferred this appeal to the High Court, and it was contended on their behalf (1) that the Courts below had no jurisdiction in a proceeding under sec. 158, Bengal Tenancy Act, to assess additional rent for excess lands, the scope of the section being limited to finding the actual existing rent payable, and (2) that the additional rent has been assessed upon a wrong principle which should, if at all, be fixed according to the provisions of sec. 52 of the Act.

Held—That in a proceeding under sec. 158 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, the Court has no jurisdiction to assess additional rent for excess lands found to be in the occupation of the tenants, its function being limited to record the existing rent payable by the tenant at the time of the application.

That in the present case, the assessment of additional rent for excess lands is ultra vires and should be set aside, and Rs. 109-8-4 should be recorded as the rent payable at the time of the application.

REPORTS (See Index.)

JUDGE EMDEN HAS CONTRIBUTED AN ARTICLE IN THE May number of the Nineteenth Century under the suggestive title "Is law for the People or the Lawyers." He opens his article by quoting from Carlyle that it is "difficult to sweep the intricate foul Chimneys of law" and soon follows it up by the valuable advice of Lord Justice Willes "Whatever you do, never go to law; submit rather to almost any imposition, bear any oppression rather than exhaust your spirits and your pocket in what is called a court of justice." To this the writer adds, 'matters have improved; but the advice is just as useful now. . . . There is little real justice done if the party in whose favour judgment is given finds that he has really unplumed himself that others may be decorated with his feathers.' According to him the complexity and technicality of legal procedure are responsible for the ruinous effects of legal remedies and that lawyers are as a class much to blame for it. They spend all their ingenuity in increasing the complexity of procedure and also resist all attempts at reform. We may be prepared to concede that Judge Emden's charges against the legal profession may not be unfounded, but yet we are unable to discover in his article anything very original or practical. We doubt whether depriving suits of "the fascinating frames" which lawyers call "pleadings" would really result in any saving of time at the hearing. Simplicity and not total abolition of pleadings is what would enable a judge to direct evidence to the true issue, clear, unobscured and unadorned. The writer's other remedies such as a fixed rate of remuneration of legal practitioners and codified laws, we already possess in India. But codified laws are often as difficult to administer and interpret as perhaps the unwritten laws of England. The Hindu and Mahomedan laws are uncodified, but their leading principles are not difficult to grasp and are ordinarily administered by even English judges with greater ease than the Succession and other cognate Acts. Although we are in sympathy with some of Judge Emden's views we are unable to accept many of his conclusions.

THE MOST MARKED EFFECT THAT THE MODERN THEORY of crime has had over the administration of law is as to the infliction of punishment. The primitive idea of punishment was retaliation, and it is not surprising that it proceeded on the principle of tooth for a tooth, eye for an eye or life for a life. But if the object of punishment really be to afford protection to society and to reclaim the criminal, it must be admitted that capital punishment is but a barbaric relic of the past and should no longer find any place in any civilized system of laws. It has been abolished in many of the continental states in Europe and in the result no increase in violent offences against person has followed. This deprives those, who are in its favour, of the pet argument that it should be retained as a deterrent against taking life. It is also a significant fact that this form of punishment is most unpopular amongst the Hindus and yet, criminal statistics show that they are a people who display the greatest respect for life. We shall urge upon the Humanitarian League, who have done singular service in humanising public feeling and in effecting prison reforms, to take up this question in right earnest.

THE COUNCIL OF THE HUMANITARIAN LEAGUE UNANIMOUSLY adopted the following resolution moved recently by Dr. Morrison :—

That the Humanitarian League notes with much pleasure the progress made during the past year in the humanising of public feeling with regard to the prison system, as shown, on the one hand, in the practical disuse of the treadmill, the modification of prison punishments, and other reforms for which the league has contended, and, on the other hand, in the defeat of all attempts to extend the use of the lash either for adult or for juvenile offenders.

THE REACTIONARY MOVEMENT FOR THE REVIVAL OF the lash which was set on foot in England, now so very long ago, has been successfully quelled by the opposition of the press and the pressure of public opinion (4 C. W. N. cxc). They have all through the struggle been staunch supporters of those who advocate humanitarian measures as a more effective means of reclaiming criminals. It was through their efforts that the Legislature had to abandon the proposed amendments of the Whipping Act pressed upon them by certain reactionists with the support of some judges. The English Bill which met with a qualified approval in the House of Lords (4 C. W. N. 137-8n.) was opposed in the House of Commons by the leaders of both parties and was rejected by a large majority in the lower House (4 C. W. N. 153n.). The Indian Bill had, however, before that become law (4 C. W. N. 78 9n., 85 86 n.). As for the history of the earlier Act, our articles in Vol. III, pp. 318n. and 326n., may be referred to. It must be mentioned, however, that some of the more objectionable features of the Bill of 1900 were at the time abandoned by the Legislature and what remained, are now being smoothed over by judicial decisions. Having regard to the sympathetic administration of the law in our superior Courts we may yet hope to win over the Legislature and the mofussil magistracy to our views.

IT IS WITH PLEASURE, THEREFOR, THAT WE NOTE THE announcement by our English contemporary the Law Times of the promised omission of the whipping clauses from the new Youthful Offenders Bill, and hope that the Indian Legislature will follow the lead. Our mofussil magistrates being cut off from the outside world are not unoften found to be in favour of primitive methods of punishment. "In a very recent instance a sub-divisional officer sentenced a student of 15 years, belonging to a respectable family, to a sentence of whipping. The accused moved the High Court, and Ghose and Taylor, JJ., found that the evidence was not even sufficient to warrant a conviction. The comment, made by one of our daily contemporaries that "whipping is a most barbarous punishment which should never be resorted to with a light heart," reflects only the common feeling of the people of this country. We must say that our High Courts do not countenance such methods of punishment and seldom miss an opportunity of putting a very wholesome check upon the acts of indiscretion of mofussil magistrate. (See Empress v. Hamed Hossain per Rampul and Pratt, JJ., 3 C. W. N. 330n.; 4 C. W. N. 86n.). Mr. justice Prinsep has also, repeatedly, drawn the attention of the subordinate judiciary to the new provisions of law as embodied in the Code of Criminal Procedure (sec. 562) and in the Reformatory Schools Act (sec. 31) and has suggested that they should largely avail themselves of these humane principles in dealing with "first" and "juvenile" offenders.

THE FOLLOWING NOTE FROM THE ENGLISH LAW Journal will well illustrate how the ideas with regard to the method of treatment of youthful offenders have undergone a change within recent times.

A 'juvenile offender' of an unusually enterprising type—Harry Johnson, or Thompson, by way of alias—was dealt with at Southwark Police Court last week. Johnson, who is sixteen years of age, had induced a Mr. Day to give him employment by representing himself as an orphan and homeless. He adopted, however, a peculiar method of evincing his gratitude to his benefactor. Mr. Day had brought with him to his place of business a bag containing about 45*l.* to pay a bill. When his back was turned, Johnson decamped with it. He proceeded to expend his treasure with lavish freehandedness. First of all he took four other boys to a music-hall, and gave them excellent seats and ample refreshment. Then he engaged rooms for a month at Southsea, and led a life for some little time which Jack Sheppard might have envied. He went to all sorts of public entertainments, hired horses and traps, had himself photographed on horse back, and had just arranged to drive to the local races when the arm of the law intervened. His festivities at the music-hall had attracted the critical notice of the police. The Portsmouth police kept a watch on his movements, and he was arrested in the midst of his triumphal progress. Mr. Day, his employer, with a charitable-mindedness that did him credit, recommended Johnson to mercy, and the magistrate committed him to the training ship Cornwall, off Purfleet, for three years. It is not a little matter that there are institutions of the kind to which precocious offenders like Johnson can be sent. Ordinary prison life would merely make them habitual criminals. To let them loose again upon society after a few months' detention is no true clemency. What they need is the combined influence of strict discipline and an outlet, in hard work and regular exercise and amusement, for their superabundant vitality.

HOUSE OF LORDS—BULLIVANT AND OTHERS v. THE ATTORNEY-GENERAL FOR VICTORIA Before the LORD CHANCELLOR, LORDS SHAND, DAVEY, BRAMPTON and LINDLEY. 2nd May 1901.

Solicitor and client—Confidential communications—Privilege from production.

This was an appeal of the Defendants against a decision of the Court of Appeal (Justices Collins and Romer) affirming a decision of Mr. Justice Mathew at Chamber. The case arose under 22 Vict., Ch. 20, which confers auxiliary jurisdiction to the tribunals in this country under a commission issued from a Colony to enforce the attendance of witnesses in aid of colonial proceedings. The complaint (for the revenue authorities of Victoria) of the Attorney-General of Victoria who filed the information was in substance that certain voluntary deeds had been executed to evade certain death duties. The Plaintiff desired to have an order directing the Appellant Stanley Austin to produce certain documents before a commission appointed by the Supreme Court of the Colony for the purpose of taking evidence of witnesses in England. The Appellants denied the intent charged; nevertheless the order sought was granted.

Of the Appellants two were executors in Victoria of James Austin who died in March 1896 having by his Will made in the previous year appointed the said Stanley Austin and another executors of his Will of his English property. The Appellant Bullivant and one Grey were appointed executors of his Australian property. Stanley Austin and his co-executor Bath were solicitors of Glastonbury in Somerset. The firm was known as Bath and Austin. Stanley Austin survived his partner. That firm had been employed by the testator James Austin in preparing the settlements, conveyances and assignments and it was the conveyances which they prepared that were involved in the proceedings. The question was whether the books and other records kept by that firm of solicitors with reference to the instructions given by the testator James Austin as to and concerning such settlements were or were not privileged from production in this action in which the Attorney-General of Victoria claimed £20,000 duty alleged to be due under the Administration and Probate Act of 1890 in respect to the property alleged to form part of the said testator's estate.

The LORD CHANCELLOR in allowing the appeal said that the law intended to protect confidential communications which passed between a man and his legal adviser. It was a well-established principle of public policy that such confidences should not be disclosed; there were limitations of that principle, communications which were part of criminal or illegal proceedings were outside that principle. But to displace the privilege there must be some definite charge or allegation of improper or illegal conduct. Mere conjecture of intent to commit such act fell far short of what was necessary. In this case there was no definite charge of fraud. In the recent case of Simms v. Registrar of Probates (1900, A. C. 323) before the Privy Council, it was held that it was no fraud for a man to make a voluntary conveyance unless there was some secret arrangement whereby the deed was one thing and the fact was really different.

LORD DAVEY said the fallacy of the Court of Appeal's decision seemed to be that it treated the statute as if it made the execution of voluntary deeds illegal which it did not do.

The other Lords concurred and the appeal was allowed with costs.

COURT OF APPEAL.—IND. COOPE and Co. v. HAMBLIN. Before LORD ALVERSTON, LORDS JUSTICES RIGBY and WILLIAMS. 7th December 1900.

Vendor and purchaser—Restrictive covenant—Meaning of "adjoining" Plaintiff's property.

By conveyance bearing date 24th June 1897 Plaintiffs sold land in Worcestershire to Defendant.

The purchaser covenanted that he would not, "in the erection of buildings adjoining the hereditaments of the vendors," construct any windows overlooking such premises. At the rear of Plaintiffs' hotel the Plaintiffs had ground which they used as a bowling green and which adjoined the property sold to the Defendant, and the object with which such covenant was inserted in the conveyance was to protect the privacy of the bowling green and of the hotel premises. The Defendant built a number of workman's cottages on the lands, the subject-matter of the sale to him, the backs whereof were some 20 feet from the fence which separated the properties of the two litigants. Windows were made which overlooked the bowling green.

MR JUSTICE BUCKLEY had held that there had been a breach of the covenant by Defendant and although refusing to Plaintiffs the injunction they sought directed an enquiry as to damages. On the Defendant's appeal the Court as above constituted held that the new erections did not "adjoin" Plaintiffs' property within the meaning of the covenant. The word did not mean "near" but its ordinary interpretation must prevail.

Mr. Terrell, Q. C., and Mr. Clayton in support of the Appeal.

Mr. Astbury, Q. C., and Mr. Stewart Smith for the Respondents.

COURT OF APPEAL.—CHESSUM and Co. v. GORDON. Before the MASTER OF THE ROLLS, LORDS JUSTICES COLLINS and ROMER. 11th February 1901.

Taxation of costs—Accidental omission—Jurisdiction to amend—Order XXVIII, Rule XI.

In an action between the parties Plaintiff had secured judgment for an amount to be ascertained by a special referee. Plaintiff was to have costs. Plaintiffs paid the referee's fees £160 and judgment was entered for Plaintiff for £3,863 with costs to be taxed. The £160 were paid to the referee by cheque drawn by Plaintiff himself, so that such payment was not entered in Plaintiff's solicitor's ledger, and in drawing up a bill the taxation of costs, such amount was inadvertently omitted from it. Plaintiff's costs were taxed and certified by the taxing master and paid by Defendant. A month or two after such settlement, the omission was discovered; and on Defendant refusing to pay that sum, application was made at Chambers, and Mr. Justice Dey made an order that the referee's fees be brought before the taxing master for taxation, and that his certificate be amended, if necessary, on the ground of the omission, by mistake.

On this appeal by Defendant from such decision, the Court of Appeal held that the taxing master's certificate was not conclusive, the Judge had jurisdiction to make the order for the purpose of rectifying a mere omission. They referred to the above order and decided that the learned Judge's order was correct.

Mr. E. Hill for the Appellant.

Mr. Ackland for the Respondent.

Appeal dismissed with costs.

QUEEN'S BENCH DIVISION.—GRESWOLDE WILLIAMS v. BARNEY. Before MR. JUSTICE WILLS. 3rd December 1900.

Warranty in particulars of property to be sold by auction—Preliminary contract superseded by conveyance.

Plaintiff bought at the auction mart an estate for £30,000 in July 1898.

The particulars of sale stated "sanitary arrangements throughout in first class order thoroughly overhauled in 1894. Not the slightest outlay being needed before occupation. Everything was as perfect as possible."

After the purchase on such announcement, a conveyance followed in December 1898.

Later on Plaintiff found that the drainage was very defective. That all that had been done in 1894 was an expenditure of £63 to render drainage fit for the occupation of the house for a 12 months let. Plaintiff had to spend a large sum of money in thoroughly overhauling and putting sound new drainage and he now sued to be recouped a portion of the outlay. The claim was based on the warranty contained in the particulars of sale.

The learned Judge, after considering a number of authorities cited before him and following Leggott v. Barrett (15 Ch. D. 306, see pages 309-10) held that the preliminary contract was superseded by the conveyance. The latter contained no warranty. The particulars of sale (which was of a preliminary character) therefore could not now be relied on so as to form the basis of this action. If it was meant that the warranty was to survive, it could have been inserted in the conveyance. The action must therefore fail.

Mr. Danckwerts, Q. C., and Mr. Chitty for the Plaintiff.

Sir Edward Clark, Q. C., and Mr. Tindal Atkinson for the Defendant.

Action dismissed.

QUEEN'S BENCH DIVISION.—MACAN v. MACAN. Before MR. JUSTICE BIGHAM. 8th December 1900.

Husband and wife—Separation deed—Arrears due—Cohabitation—Accord and satisfaction.

ROWELL v. ROWELL (1900, 1 Q. B. 9) distinguished. The husband and wife had separated; the deed of 13th May 1898 given by husband had provided for payment in advance of 7s. 6d. a week during their joint lives as long as the wife remained chaste. Some payments were regularly made but from 10th February 1900 to 10th August 1900 for 26 weeks it fell into arrears. Subsequent to the last-mentioned date cohabitation was resumed.

The question was whether the resumption of cohabitation discharged the Defendant, the husband from his liability to pay the arrears of 26 weeks for which the claim was made. The learned Judge held that it did not, the money having become due before the cohabitation that made the difference between this case and Rowell v. Rowell where the money had fallen due subsequent to the resumed cohabitation.

Mr. Stepton Lynch for the Plaintiff.

Mr. Ellis Hill for the Defendant.

APPEAL FROM ORDER

No. 147 of 1900.

BAJI NATH LOHRA, Judgment-debtor, Appellant,

HILL, J.

1901.

20, May.

BINOYENDARA NATH PALIT, decree-holder, and SHOSHI MOHUN DEB, Auction-purchaser, Respondent.

Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), secs. 273, 298, 311—Mortgage decree, whether immovable property—Sale, setting aside of.

This appeal arose out of an application made by the Appellant under sec. 311, C. P. C., to the Court below to set aside a sale held in execution of a decree; the subject-matter of the sale was a decree held by the judgment-debtor upon a mortgage of certain immovable property. The principal question was whether the decree was moveable or immovable property as entitling the purchaser, at all events, to a claim to bring immovable property to sale, and whether sec. 311, C. P. C., applied to such a case. The other contention of law on behalf of the Appellant was that the mode of attachment adopted by the lower Court was not in accordance with the provisions of sec. 273, C. P. C.

Held—That having regard to the definition of "immovable property," as given in the General Clauses Act, a decree upon a mortgage is incapable of being described or regarded as immovable property and that the application under sec. 311, C. P. C., was incompetent, that section being confined in its operation to sales of immovable property. Gous Mahomed v. Khewas Ali Khan (1 L. R. 23 Cal. 450) relied upon.

That a decree upon a mortgage is not a money decree within the provisions of sec. 273, C. P. C. Surji Prasad Misser v. E. R. Macnaghten (4 C. W. N. xxxv) followed.

Babu Jogendra Nath Chatterjee for the Appellant.

Babus Tara Kiore Chowdry and Jadu Nath Kanjilal for the Respondent.

REPORTS (See Index.)

QUESTIONS HAVE SOMETIMES BEEN RAISED AS TO whether the High Court has powers under the Code of Criminal Procedure, to stay the execution of sentences of whipping. Evidently the Court has such powers under sec 439 of the Code which provides that the High Court may, in its discretion, exercise any of the powers, conferred on a Court of Appeal, and among others, those under sec. 426. This section provides that an Appellate Court may order that the execution of the sentence or order be suspended pending appeal. It is always safer to order the stay of the execution of such sentences pending revision, especially as inexperienced magistrates are sometimes very precipitous in carrying them out. We call attention to the case of Empress v. Hamid Hossein per Rampini and Pratt, JJ., 3 C. W. N. cccxxx.

LORD BACON, TO WHOM WE ARE INDEBTED FOR SO much wise counsel, while addressing, as Lord Keeper, a newly-appointed Judge of the Common Pleas, gave him some advice which has ever since been followed as a golden rule of conduct on the Bench. The attributes of a judge, according to Bacon, are:—

He was to draw learning out of his books, not out of his brain; he was to mix well the freedom of his own opinion with reverence of the opinion of his fellows; he was to continue the studying of his books, and not to spend upon the old stock; he was to fear no man's face, and yet not turn stoutness into bravery; he was to be truly impartial, and not so as men might see affection through a fine carriage; he was to be a light to jurors to open their eyes, but not a guide to lead them by the nose; he was not to affect an opinion of pregnancy and expedition by an impatient and catching hearing of the counsellors at the Bar; his speech was to be with gravity as one of the sages of the law, and not talkative, nor with impertinent flying out to show learning; he was to carry such a hand over his ministers and clerks that they might rather be in awe of him than presume upon him.

AT THE ANNUAL DINNER OF THE LAW STUDENTS Debating Society, Dr. W. Blake Odgers made the following observations with regard to the growth of the profession of barristers during the course of the last century.

He had had occasion to look into the figures in order to find out how many barristers there were at present. He was sorry to say there were 9463 who had been called to the Bar. That was a portentously large number. He had looked at the number at the beginning of the last century. In 1800 there were only 556 barristers. It was a serious thing that the numbers had increased so largely in a hundred years. Where was the work for all these people to come from? They would remember what Curran said that a man might be bred to the Bar, but it did not follow that the Bar might be bread to him.

IT IS, HOWEVER, GRATIFYING TO NOTE THAT NOTWITH- standing the growth in numbers, the ideas of professional honour stands much higher to-day than it did a century ago. The Lord Chief Justice in proposing the toast at the above dinner observed in the course of his speech:—

He was old enough to remember when it was supposed to be the right thing at the Bar in the conduct of cases for rival advocates to quarrel always with one another. And they had only to read the description of members of the Legal Profession in the novels of fifty or sixty years ago to recognise the fact that the idea of all barristers who were opposed to each other in conducting cases was to try and trick one another. Honourable and straightforward conduct was, at that time, quite unknown to those who thought they understood the Legal Profession.

THE QUESTION OF CURTAILMENT OF THE RIGHT OF appeal has been a moot subject for discussion in India for years past. The consensus of both public and professional opinion is against it. The chance of an appeal to a superior court serves always as a very salutary check and as a sufficient guarantee for a due discharge of duties by the subordinate judiciary.

Every one in the mofussil knows in what perfunctory manner suits of a Small Cause Court nature are disposed of, simply because there is no appeal from them. Our views with regard to the matter find support from the recent review of "British and European Criminal Law" by Sir John Scott. His reasonings are general and are applied to all cases as well. Sir John Scott maintains that there should always be an appeal to a higher court on a question of law. But as regards findings of facts the view of the lower court may be regarded final provided a judge of first instance be an able lawyer and is well-paid.

The one-judge system requires, in my opinion, some kind of appeal on points of law in order to maintain the consistency of jurisprudence. In Egypt and in India an appeal even on the facts in criminal cases is allowed where the jury system does not obtain. But I have a strong opinion that the judge, if he is a capable man who sees the witnesses, especially if he is aided by assessors, is much more to be trusted on any decision of fact than a Court of Appeal, however ably constituted, who only read the record of the proceedings. Questions of law should be submitted to a higher court as a matter of course. Questions of fact, I think, on the whole are better left to the court of first instance. But it is of capital importance that the judge of first instance should be an able lawyer and very well paid; and, if that is the case, I would prefer his opinion to that of any other court which has not seen and heard the witnesses and observed their demeanour. Yet in my dealings with various nations I have found that most people are very much inclined in favour of a general appeal even in criminal cases. I speak with great submission, because most people would take the other view, but I think there should be no appeal whatever in criminal cases on questions of fact, and that the appeal should be strictly limited to points of law. I would make that appeal as speedy as possible, and I would present it to the strongest court that could be constituted.

RENT AND REVENUE CASES, 1900.

(4 C. W. N. and I. L. R. 27 Cal.)

THE BENGAL TENANCY ACT.

The Bengal Tenancy Act applies to lands situated outside the limits of the Town of Calcutta, but within its municipal boundaries, as defined by Bengal Act II of 1888. Maclean, C. J., in Biraj Mohini v. Gopewar, says:—"The term 'Town of Calcutta' is one well recognised? and at the time of the passing of the Bengal Tenancy Act, its boundaries were well known and well defined, and that expression, as used in the Tenancy Act, can, in my opinion, only relate to the Town as it existed at the time of the passing of the Act." Biraj Mohini Dassi v. Gopewar Mullick (27 Cal. 202, Maclean, C. J., and Banerjee, J.).

It has been now settled by a Full Bench that a suit brought by an assignee for recovery of arrears of rent assigned after they fell due is a suit for recovery of rent and is excepted from the cognisance of the Court of Small Causes. (Maclean, C. J., Macpherson, Hill, and Stevens, JJ.,—Banerjee, J., dissenting)

Srish Chunder Bose v. Nachim Kazi (4 C. W. N. 357: s. c. 27 Cal. 827) following and approving Sheikh Mansur v. Loke Nath Roy (4 C. W. N. 10) which was a case under Act VIII of 1869, B. C. (Macpherson and Wilkins, JJ.).

The Full Bench only decided as to whether the suit would lie in the Small Causes Court or in the ordinary Civil Court. The question whether a decree in such a suit would be considered a rent decree for all purposes is still open. The question whether the special limitation prescribed in the third schedule to the Bengal Tenancy Act would apply to a suit for rent by an assignee came up for decision before Rampini and Wilkins, JJ., in the case of Mahendra Nath Kalamoree v. Kailash Chandra Dogra (4 C. W. N. 605) and the question was answered in the negative, and it was held that a suit for rent by an assignee is not a suit by a landlord and such a suit is not a suit between a landlord and a tenant and therefore the Limitation Act XV of 1877 applied. The decision would seem to conflict with the principle of the Full Bench case, Srish v. Nachim. There Maclean, C. J., puts the matter very clearly in the following terms: "The money was due as rent at the time of assignment, and the assignment did not deprive it of that character, so far as all events as the tenant was concerned . . . ."

A departure from this principle may lead to anomalous results. For instance, a suit for rent on a registered kabuliyat is governed by 3 years' limitation, but if the landlord assigns his rent, the assignee would, according to the above decision, get the longer period of 6 years under the Limitation Act, the agreement being registered.

The definition of "tenure holder" seems to be Definition of defective. It does not say whether the persons in immediate occupation of the lands comprised in a tenure may be agricultural tenants. But it has been held in the case of Umrao Bibi v. Syed Mahomed Rajan (4 C. W. N. 76: s. c. 27 Cal. 205, per Banerjee, J.) that a tenure holder within the meaning of the Act is a person who holds land which is used for agricultural or horticultural purposes. Sec. 7 of the Act was referred to.

A purchaser of a tenure is not personally liable for its rent which fell due before the date of purchase, although the tenure may be liable for such rent. Jogemaya Dassi v. Girindra Nath Mukerjee (4 C. W. N. 590, Banerjee and Stevens, JJ.).

Sec. 16 of the Bengal Tenancy Act is a penal provision and it has been held in Sheriff v. Jogemaya Dassi (27 Cal. 535, by Banerjee and Stevens, JJ.) that it should be strictly construed. It was also held that in a case where the Plaintiffs brought a suit as reversionary heirs to their father's estate after their mother's death, the suit was maintainable so far as it related to the claim during their mother's lifetime, although their mother had not complied with the provisions of sec. 15 of the Act.

Sec. 18 of the Bengal Tenancy Act does not make all the incidents of a permanent tenure applicable to a raiyati holding at fixed rates, but makes only the provisions with respect to transfer and succession applicable. Nilmani v. Mathura (4 C. W. N. clix).

Sec. 22 does not apply to a non-transferable occupancy holding, and it has been rightly held that in the case of a non-transferable occupancy holding, the holding cannot be sold without the right of occupancy so as to give the transferee a right to retain possession of it. Girish Chandra Chaudhury v. Kedar Chandra Roy (4 C. W. N. 569; s. c. 27 Cal. 473).

Sec. 26 declares the right of an occupancy raiyat heritable, so when a rent-suit is brought by a landlord against some of the several heirs, ignoring the others, the decree cannot be considered as a rent decree and the sale in execution of such a decree cannot affect the interest of those who are not parties to the decree. Anoda Kumar Naskar v. Hari Das Haldar (4 C. W. N. 608; s. c. 27 Cal. 545).

Sec. 46, cl. 9 says: "In determining what rent is fair and equitable, the Court shall have regard to the rents generally paid by raiyats for land of a similar description and with like advantages in the same village." It has been held that this clause is not exhaustive and that other evidence may be taken: Hossain Ali Khan v. Ulati Charan Shaw (4 C. W. N. 321; s. c. 27 Cal. 376, Rampini and Wilkins, JJ.). Their Lordships, however, left it open as to what would amount to fair and equitable rent, nor did they give any definite direction as to how it is to be determined. It would not be desirable to put hard and fast limitations in this connection.

A tenant cannot get the presumption as to the fixity of rent unless the rent is shown to have been paid at the same rate from the time of the Permanent Settlement. Permanent Settlement is defined in sec. 3, cl. 12, as being the Permanent Settlement of Bengal, Behar and Orissa, made in the year 1793. But in the case of Tamasa Bibi v. Ashutosh Dhur (4 C. W. N. 513) it was held by Maclean, C. J., and Banerjee, J., that when a question arises as to whether a tenant is entitled to the presumption, the fact that the estate within which the tenure is held was permanently settled subsequent to 1793 did not make any difference. One of several tenants sued separately is not competent to claim reduction under sec. 52, but his remedy lies in bringing a suit against all the landlords and the other tenants: Bhoopendra Narain Dutt v. Raman Krishna Dutt (4 C. W. N. 107; s. c. 27 Cal. 417). Sec. 52 is not also applicable to a case of encroachment to the original holding: Khondakar Abdul Hamid v. Mohini Kant Shaha (4 C. W. N. 508, Banerjee and Stevens, JJ.). The presumption as provided in sec. 50, sub-sec. (2) can be made only in a suit or proceeding under the Bengal Tenancy Act and the section does not apply to a suit for damages under the Small Cause Court Act. Nilmani v. Mathura Nath (4 C. W. N. clix).

Sec. 60 of the Act debars a tenant from pleading that rent is due to a third person registered proprietor when the suit is brought by a registered proprietor, but the case of Durga Das Hazra v. Samosh Akon (4 C. W. N. 606, Norris and Gordon, JJ., 10th July 1895) shews that there may be circumstances to take a case out of this rule. Their Lordships decided in this case that sec. 60 did not estop the Defendant from pleading that rent was due to a third person "where the Defendant in good faith and under the reasonable belief that the land held by him was included in the estate of a third person attorned to him some four years prior to the suit brought for rent by the registered proprietor." The reason for this decision seems to be that the lower Court found that Plaintiff was out of possession inasmuch as the Defendant attorned to a third person, and their Lordships accepted that view. It may be questioned how far this is in accordance with sec. 60 and whether attorning by a tenant to a third person would amount to dispossession of the landlord.

In the case of Fakir Lal Goswami v. W. C. Bonnerjee (4 C. W. N. 324, Hill and Rampini, JJ.) it was held that a tenant's liability to pay rent remains in the absence of any controlling agreement and notwithstanding the fact that the landlord may not have any village office and may not have appointed a convenient place for payment under sec. 54, sub-sec. (2), and that the tenant should take the rent to his landlord and failing, the arrears so falling due will carry interest under sec. 67. This seems hard, especially as the law does not permit of any deposit being made under such circumstances. This matter seems to require reconsideration either on the Bench or by the Legislature.

Where a raiyat surrenders his holding, the landlord is entitled to re-enter by effecting the under-raiyat, if he is not protected by sec. 85 or sec. 86, cl. (b). In such a case no notice to quit is necessary. Nilkant Chaki v. Ghatoo Sheikh (4 C. W. N. 667, Macpherson and Stevens, JJ.).

The case of Samujan Roy v. Munshi Mahton

(4 C. W. N. 493, Rampini and Wilkins, JJ.) approves of the earlier cases: Lal Mamud v. Arbulah (1 C. W. N. 128), Bhagwan v. Biswasari (3 C. W. N. 48), and holds that the provisions of sec. 87 are not exhaustive.

CHANCERY DIVISION.—MUSPRATT WILLIAMS v. HOWE. Before MR. JUSTICE COZENS HARDY. 17th January 1901.

Marriage settlement—Husband's domicile—Lex loci contractu.

A Miss Kerr of Glasgow married in December 1857 in Scotland a Mr. Robert Bullen, and the question raised in these proceedings was what law governed the ante-nuptial settlement made by Mr. Robert Bullen who was a Scotchman, but was domiciled at Mauritius where he was a merchant and owned property there.

An ante-nuptial settlement was made by the lady in Scotch form in 1857 at Edinburgh. The lawyer who then acted for her in his affidavit disclosed that the husband's settlement (of property in Mauritius and 2 several policies on his life in the Standard Assurance Company) was made in London by a London barrister in the English form, because that barrister had special knowledge of the law of Mauritius. In both the wife's and husband's settlement it was stated in terms that the application of the law of Mauritius in so far as it was at variance with the Scotch contract would be excluded. Miss Kerr's settlement also recited the settlement made by the husband.

The question was which law governed the husband's settlement which was also executed in Scotland. The learned Judge in his judgment states that there was nothing on the fact of the husband's deed to denote by what law it should be governed. The general rule that a marriage settlement is governed by the law of the husband's domicile was not applicable, that law being in express terms excluded; that being so the lex loci contractu must govern this matter which was in Scotland. It was only for the purpose of convenience and with a view to registration in Mauritius that the settlement made by the husband was not comprised in the Scotch contract. The English form of the husband's settlement was explained by the affidavit and the deed was not executed in England and contained no English property.

Held—That the Scotch law governed the construction of the Bullen settlement.

Mr. Mecklern, Q. C., and Mr. Rolt, Mr. W. H. Cozens Hardy and others appeared for the various parties interested.

PRIVY COUNCIL.—Appeal from the Punjab. AHMAD YAR KHAN AND OTHERS v. THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA AND ANOTHER. 11th May 1901.

LORD MACNAGHTEN delivered their Lordships' reserved judgment which concludes as follows:—In the result "the Appellants were entitled to a declaration that subject and without prejudice to the privilege conferred upon the Government by cl. 8 of the sanad of 20th March 1886, they are entitled to a proprietary right in three-fourths share of the Haji-wah Canal. In other respects the suit failed. Their Lordships were of opinion that there ought to be no costs of the first hearing, but that the Secretary of State ought to pay the costs of the appeal to the Chief Court of the Punjab and the costs of this appeal, and their Lordships would advise His Majesty accordingly."

Appeal to His Majesty in Council—Deposit of security—Death of Appellant—Application by Respondents to be declared entitled to the security.

This was a petition of the Respondents Phul Chand and another to His Majesty in Council. Phul Chand and the other Respondent were the reversionary heirs of one Kant Das who had died without leaving issue in 1883. They had instituted a suit against his widow, the Appellant Mandil Koer, and her adopted son in the Bankipore Sub-Judge's Court praying for a declaration that the alleged adoption never took place.

Pending the suit the adopted son died, and his widow, the abovenamed Kishmish Koer, was substituted as Defendant and continues as party to the suit.

Both the said Sub-Judge and a Division Bench of the Calcutta High Court decided against the adoption, and the reversioners, the Petitioners, were successful in both Courts in the suit.

Thereupon both Mandil Koer and Kishmish Koer obtained leave from the said High Court to appeal to Her Majesty in Council, and the appeal was finally admitted on 1st June 1898, by an order which stated that the Appellants had lodged the proper security and the record was in due course transmitted to the Registrar of the Privy Council.

Musst. Mandil Koer died on the 29th May 1900, and no steps had been taken to substitute any person as her representative on the record.

On the 30th November 1900 Petitioners presented a petition to the said High Court in which they stated that the security in deposit for the appeal was exclusively the money of Musst. Mandil Koer and as such now belonged to the Respondents in this Privy Council appeal, they being not only the heirs to Kant Das but to the deceased Appellant Musst. Mandil Koer.

Affidavits were put in in support of such allegation, and a counter-affidavit of the father of the Kishmish Koer was put in stating that the money deposited was his (her father, Lal Babu's) money.

The High Court on the petition coming on for hearing stated that they could not interfere in the matter, and the application must be made to the Privy Council.

The petition prayed that the matter may be referred to the High Court to enquire and report whose money it was that was deposited, or for their Lordships to declare the deposit made in the appeal belonged to Petitioners.

Mr. Mayne in support of the application.

Mr. C. W. Arathoon opposing.

Their Lordships refused the application and ordered Petitioners to pay the costs of it.

of Nattore for special leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council in suit No. 14 of 1893, which he had instituted against the Respondents in the Mymensingh Sub-Judge's Court.

The suit was for the establishment of title and recovery of possession of certain lands included in and appertaining to a Mouzah Gabsara.

The Sub-Judge had decreed the suit.

The Defendants-Respondents thereupon had appealed to the District Judge, but subsequently on the Respondents' application the appeal was transferred for determination to the High Court by an order of that Court.

On that appeal being heard, the High Court agreed with the Sub-Judge on the merits, but decided that the suit was barred by limitation and dismissed it.

That on the same day and in the same Sub-Judge's Court the Petitioner had instituted another suit against the Respondent Rani Hemanta Kumari alone for possession of another parcel of land in the same Mouzah Gabsara, a much larger plot of land. The claim to both plots were based on one and the same title.

This suit was valued at Rs. 11,250, while the other was valued at Rs. 3,700.

That both suits were tried together with the same result, the Sub-Judge decreeing the suits and the High Court deciding against the Petitioner.

Thereupon the Petitioner made separate applications praying for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council in both suits.

The High Court granted leave to appeal in the suit valued at Rs. 11,250, but refused it in the suit valued at Rs. 3,700.

Petitioner now prayed that leave to appeal should be granted in the smaller suit as well, so that complete justice might be done in the causes which were heard together and wherein the lands claimed were in the same village.

Mortgage—Priorities.

This was an appeal from a decision of the Allahabad High Court which reversed the decision of the Sub-Judge of Meerut. The suit was brought by

v.

LALA PHUL CHAND.

the Appellants to establish their priority over the Respondent in respect of a debt due under a deed of hypothecation, dated 4th May 1883.

The facts are:—Ghulam Gaus Khan died leaving a large quantity of land of which 12 biswas were inherited by his daughters and 8 biswas by his son, Ismail Khan.

On 20th January 1882 the daughters sold to Appellants their said interest in Mouzahs Chachora, Aminabad and Chauki which are now in dispute. Other mouzahs were also sold, but no further reference need be made to them. On 24th January 1883 Ismail Khan filed a suit (1 of 1883) against the Appellants and their vendors to enforce his right of pre-emption in respect of the whole property sold.

On the 4th May Ismail Khan made an arrangement with the Appellants whereby he re-purchased from them for Rs. 15,500 the villages sold by the daughters and hypothecated the 12 biswas share in each of them as security for payment of the sum with 9 per cent. interest.

On 5th May a consent decree was passed in said suit (1 of 1883) which embodied such arrangement.

On 3rd November Ismail Khan executed a further document in favour of the Appellants and of one Sakla Mal in which after reciting that Rs. 16,197 were due under said bond of 4th May 1883 and further advances made, that Rs. 20,000 were due in all, he granted a 2nd hypothecation on the said three daughters' interest and gave a new hypothecation on his own 8 biswas.

The Appellants' case was that by this transaction all priorities created by the bond of 4th May 1883 were preserved.

The Respondents' case was that that bond was extinct and it was abandoned.

On 10th February 1885 Appellants obtained a decree No. 219 enforcing their lien against half the property mortgaged in the said bond of 3rd November 1883, and on 20th June 1885 their father, Luchman Sarup, who on 15th April 1885 had purchased the interest of Sakla Mal in the bond of the 3rd November, obtained a similar decree No. 106 in the same Court.

On 30th June 1883 Ismail Khan executed a bond in favour of the Respondent Phul Chand for Rs. 7,000 and as security, inter alia, hypothecated the said 3 villages Chachora, Aminabad and Chauki. Phul Chand sued Ismail Khan on that bond, and on 6th March 1884 obtained a decree against him declaring his lien over those villages. In execution of that decree and of decrees 219 and 106 and others the 3 villages were sold and also other villages, all on 20th October 1887.

As to the distribution of the sale-proceeds, the Sub-Judge, on 7th February 1888, ordered certain amounts realized by the sale of each of those villages should be paid to the Respondent.

That order, Appellants contended, was wrong by their plaint in the present suit.

They urged that the monies paid to Phul Chand in respect of his mortgage of 30th June 1883 ought to have been paid to them under their hypothecation of the 4th May 1883 which had priority. They prayed for a decree directing the Respondent to repay to them the sums he had so received with interest.

The Sub-Judge dismissed the suit as time-barred under Art. 13, Limitation Act, relying on the case of Gauri Prosad Kundu (I. L. R. 13 Cal. 159).

On appeal the High Court reversed that order and remanded the cause for trial on its merits.

On the merits the Sub-Judge was of opinion that the bond of 4th May 1883 was "renovated" by the bond of 3rd November 1883, and the prior charge was expressly kept subsisting; Phul Chand's bond was of a later date and created only a puisne incumbrance. He decreed the suit.

The High Court on Defendant-Respondent's appeal decided as follows:—

"The present suit is for the recovery of the assets which were paid over to Phul Chand on the ground that, although the decree of the Respondent was based on a bond subsequent in point of time to that upon which the Appellants' decree was based, the incumbrance of the subsequent bond was in reality an incumbrance created by a bond of May 1883, and therefore prior, in point of time, to the incumbrance in favour of the Appellants and the decree which followed from that incumbrance. There can be no doubt whatever, indeed it is admitted, that the Court, which executed the decrees and paid over the assets to Phul Chand, had no jurisdiction to act otherwise than it did; but we go further. We have not in the case before us any evidence which established the alleged connection between the bond of November 1883 and the bond of May 1883. We were asked to hold that two of the villages, Aminabad and Chauki, had been sold in execution of the decree held by the Respondent. This we cannot do and for this reason that Phul Chand under the decree which he held was entitled to bring to sale and could have sold each and every scrap of the property hypothecated in his bond until enough had been realized to satisfy the whole claim covered by his decree. No Court could direct that some of that property should only be sold in that decree, and that the rest or any portion of it should be sold in satisfaction of any other decree. For these reasons we allow this appeal, set aside the decree of the Court below, and dismiss the Respondent's suit with costs in all Courts."

Mr. Mayne for Appellants contended that the Sub-Judge was right. The 1st bond was recited in the second and incorporated in it. The bond of November 1883 was supplementary to that of 4th May.

Mr. Mayne read sec. 295, C. P. C., cl. (b), and said he was unable to understand the judgment of the High Court on this matter.

LORD HOBHOUSE.—They don't go into the question whether the bond is standing of its own force. I see nothing to destroy it.

Mr. Ross, who was called on for the Respondent to explain on what ground it is said that the bond of 4th May was destroyed, urged that it was destroyed by the litigation which followed. That litigation was based on the later bond and was evidence of abandonment of the former bond. He referred to sec. 85, Transfer of Property Act.

He referred to Art. 13 of the Limitation Act, and argued that the suit was barred by limitation: see I. L. R. 13 Cal. 159 and 17 W. R. 237. •

Mr. Mayne referred to and relied on the case of Vishnu Bhikaji (I. L. R. 15 Bom. 438 at p. 440). Sec. 295, C. P. C., expressly permitted a suit of this kind. It was not a suit to set aside an order of a Civil Court. It was a suit by one person who has got too little against another who has got too much to refund; Art. 13 is not applicable.

LORD MACNAGHTEN.—Which article do you say it falls under?

Mr. Mayne.—Article 62 or 120.

He also referred to 8 I. A. 123, noticed in the decision in the 15th Bombay Series.

For setting aside a sale there is sec. 211, C. P. C., a completely different section.

THEIR LORDSHIPS' reserved judgment was delivered to-day advising His Majesty to allow the appeal with costs. •

Mr. Mayne for the Appellants.

Mr. Ross for the Respondent

[ORDINARY ORIGINAL CIVIL JURISDICTION.]

SUIT No. 683 of 1900.

HARINGTON, J. } NEEL KAMAL MUKERJEE and ORS.,
1901. } v.
3, June. } BIPRODAS MUKERJEE and another.

Bond—Continuing guarantee—Introduction of partners—Indian Contract Act (IX of 1872), sec. 260.

In this case the Plaintiffs sued the Defendants upon a bond for the sum of Rs. 5,000 executed by the Defendants in favour of the Plaintiff, Neel Kamal Mukerjee, in December 1895. The bond, after reciting that the said Biprodas Mukerjee is employed by the said Neel Kamal Mukerjee as a cash-keeper, stated, as the condition, that, "if the said Biprodas Mukerjee shall and will at all times hereafter, so long as he, the said Biprodas Mukerjee, shall continue to be employed as such cash-keeper as aforesaid by the said Neel Kamal Mukerjee well and truly and faithfully discharge his duties of such office, and shall and will and truly and faithfully perform all other business that he may from time to time be directed, enjoined or requested by the said Neel Kamal Mukerjee to do and perform, without refusing or neglecting to do the same and without consuming, wasting, embezzling, losing, mispending or unlawfully making away with any of the property, money, or effects whatsoever of the said Neel Kamal Mukerjee or of any person or persons whomsoever, for which he, the said Neel Kamal Mukerjee, his heirs, executors, representatives or administrators shall or may by law be in any wise answerable or responsible or which shall or may come into the hands of the said Biprodas Mukerjee as such cash-keeper as aforesaid and if the said Biprodas Mukerjee at all times shall and will duly and regularly account for and pay or make over to the said Neel Kamal Mukerjee or such person or persons as he may in that behalf appoint, all monies or other property which shall come to his hands either in the capacity of such cash-keeper as aforesaid or by any other means on account of the said Neel Kamal Mukerjee, and if the said Rakhal Dass Mukerjee shall and will, from time to time and at all times hereafter, save, defend, keep harmless and indemnify the said Neel Kamal Mukerjee, his heirs, executors, representatives and administrators of, from, and against all claims, demands, actions, suits, troubles, costs, charges, damages and expenses, which shall or may at any time hereafter happen or he may sustain or be put to for, or by reason, or in consequence of any negligence, refusal of duty or of any act, permission wilful or otherwise, or omission or commission, mismanagement or otherwise howsoever of the said Biprodas Mukerjee in the discharge of his duties as such cash-keeper as aforesaid, or if the said Biprodas Mukerjee and Rakhal Dass Mukerjee or either of them, their or his heirs, executors, administrators and representatives shall and will on demand pay to the said Neel Kamal Mukerjee, his heirs, etc., all such sums of money as he or they shall or may have to pay to any person or persons by reason of such negligence, omission, default or misconduct of the said Biprodas Mukerjee as aforesaid, then the above written bond or obligation shall be void and of no effect." In 1896 the two other Plaintiffs Naranath Mukerjee and Golab Roy Poddar joined Neel Kamal Mukerjee as partners and the Defendant Biprodas Mukerji was employed as cash-keeper to the firm. All the three partners brought this suit against the Defendants upon the bond, alleging that the Defendant Biprodas Mukerjee defalcated the moneys of the firm to the extent of Rs. 19,000 between 1897 and 1900.

Messrs. Sinha, Zorab and A. C. Bannerjee for the Plaintiffs. •

Messrs. Mehta and K. Chaudhuri for the Defendants.

Mr. Mehta raised a preliminary objection that there was no cause of action inasmuch as the bond was executed in favour of Neel Kamal Mukerjee only and not of the firm which was constituted after.

wards, for the faithful discharge of the duties of the Defendant Bipradas Mukerjee as cash-keeper to Neel Kamul Mukerjee and not as cash-keeper to the firm.

Death or introduction of a partner clearly revoked the bond, see the cases of Chapman v. Beckington (3 Q. B. 703); Cambridge University v. Baldwin (5 M. & W. 580); Billairs v. Ebbaworth (13 R. R. 750); Montiflore v. Lloyd (15 C. B. N. S. 203); and sec. 260 of the Contract Act was clearly to this effect.

Mr. Sinha for the Plaintiffs contended that the bond was wide enough to include defalcations of the firm, that if the new partners of the firm could not sue they could be struck off, but the suit could not fail on the ground of misjoinder of parties, that clearly Neel Kamal Mukerjee could sue as he was defrauded and that Bipradas Mukerjee could not be heard to say that he was not liable on the bond for his own frauds and misappropriations. Mr. Sinha further argued that sec. 260 of the Contract Act applied to a guarantee given to a firm and not to an individual, and in this case the guarantee was given to an individual.

Held—That the Defendants' contention must prevail by virtue of sec. 260 of the Contract Act, and that the suit will be dismissed with costs, but as there is a criminal suit against one of the Defendants for embezzlements the execution of the costs will be stayed.

Messrs. Mitter & Sarbadhicary, Attorneys for the Plaintiffs.

APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE

No. 1000 of 1889.

RAMPINI, J.
GUPTA, J.

1901.

22, May.

SHEIKH KARBAN ALI and another,
Plaintiffs, Appellants,

SHEIKH JAFAR ALI and others,
Defendants, Respondents.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), secs. 105, 106, 107, 108—Dispute in regard to record-of-rights between landlord and tenant—Distinction between secs. 105 and 106—Summary disposal of dispute—Hearing and decision of dispute under the procedure laid down in the Civil Procedure—Res judicata—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), sec. 13.

This was an appeal preferred on the 22nd May 1895, against the decree of A. E. Staley, Esq, Special Judge of Mozufferpore, dated the 22nd February 1891, reversing the decree of Babu Charu Chandra Kumar, Assistant Settlement Officer of Mozufferpore, dated the 4th November 1898.

The facts of the case material to this report were as follows:—On the application of certain raiyats, the Settlement Officer held that their rents should be entered as Rs. 13-4-6 instead of Rs. 29-4-6 as alleged by their landlord. It was not clear whether the order was made under sec. 105 or 106, of the Bengal Tenancy Act, but the Revenue Officer, in disposing of the case, did not adopt "the procedure laid down in the Code of Civil Procedure for the trial of suits."

On appeal to the District Judge, he held on the authority of the case of Durga Kazi v. Nobin Krishna Chowdhraïn, (I. L. R. 24. Cal. 462), that the matter was res judicata, as there had previously been a dispute between the parties in the course of which, viz., on the 16th December 1896, the rent had been found to be as alleged by the landlords Respondents in the present appeal.

It was not clear from the previous order itself whether it was passed in a case under sec. 105, or one under sec. 106 of the Act. The District Judge, however, described it as having been passed in a case under sec. 105, but on the authority of the case of Durga Kazi v. Nobin Krishna Chowdhraïn (I. L. R. 24 Cal. 462), seemed to think it must be regarded as having been passed in a case under sec. 106; and so, having the force of a decree, must bar the present suit.

The raiyats Appellants preferred this second appeal and contended that the matter was not res judicata as the previous decision of the Settlement Officer was passed in a case under sec. 105 of the Bengal Tenancy Act and was not passed between the same parties as the parties to the present suit.

Held—That sec. 105 of the Bengal Tenancy Act means to lay down that during the pendency of the draft publication any person affected by an entry in the record may raise an "objection" with regard to it, which the Revenue Officer to "receive" and "consider"; and dispose of in a summary manner.

That from an order disposing of such an objection there is no appeal (the Revenue Officer's order not being a decision, within the meaning of sec. 108, sub-sec. (2) and no second appeal, and the order cannot have the effect of res judicata).

That a "dispute" under sec. 106 is to be "heard" and "decided" by the Revenue Officer under the procedure laid down in the Code of Civil Procedure for the trial of suits and is subject to appeal, and second appeal, and it will have the effect of res judicata.

That the Revenue Officer in the present case not having adopted the "procedure laid down in the Code of Civil Procedure for the trial of suits," in disposing of the dispute his order must be taken to have been made under sec. 105 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, and it cannot have the effect of res judicata.

Durga Kazi v. Nobin Krishna Chowdhraïn (I. L. R. 24. Cal. 462) explained and distinguished.

Babu Joy Gopal Ghosha for the Appellant.
Babu Nalini Ranjan Chatterjee for the Respondent.

Appeal allowed; case remanded.

REPORTS (See Index.)

WE HAD GIVEN UP IN DESPAIR THE QUESTION OF reform and re-organization of the Original Side Offices. It is, therefore, encouraging to find that the Bengal Chamber of Commerce have taken up the subject in right earnest. No substantial good will be done except by a thorough overhauling of the offices and their re-organization on the lines we have already suggested. As a preliminary step a Committee of enquiry may be appointed composed of nominees of both sections of the profession and presided over, we would suggest, by Mr. Justice Stanley. The Committee may be asked to draw up a report and submit a scheme for the re-distribution of work and the re-organization of the offices on the Original Side.

THE RESOLUTION OF THE PUNJAB GOVERNMENT ON the management of the jails in the Punjab states: “It appears to the Lieutenant-Governor unquestionable that if 30 stripes are laid on consecutively on one spot, as is believed to be the case at present, the result must be disastrous.” It is said that in 34 cases prisoners had to be treated in hospitals for recovering from the effects of flogging. We cannot imagine anything more cruel and barbarous than the shocking manner in which this punishment is inflicted by expert warders in the prisons. It is too ghastly a sight to be described here in realistic terms. But the fact that after the operation the victim has often to be carried to the hospital and treated there till his wounds heal, is sufficiently suggestive. The sight of it or its effect is sure to convince any but those who are born with brutal instincts that it is a barbarity that ought not to be tolerated by any civilized Government. It is a fit problem for the psychologist to solve why the Legislature while not tolerating even the treatment of a horse in any similar manner for being cured of its vice, oppose vehemently any attempt to put limitations on the absolute powers conferred by law on raw magistrates for the maltreatment of human beings. Very little faith is put now-a-days on the curative effect of the lash even in jails. It has been discontinued in the army and navy with excellent results. As to its deterrent effect on boys, Lord Kimberley mentioned in the course of a debate in the House of Lords that “at the school where he was, a boy, not unconnected with that assembly, though not a member of it, came back 18 times.”

WE SOMETIMES HEAR IT SAID IN DISPARAGEMENT ON our jurymen and judges that they are reluctant to hang men. On one occasion this sentiment formed the subject of adverse comment in the Council Chambers of the Government of India. But after all it does not seem to be a very reprehensible sentiment as will appear from the following editorial note in the columns of the Law Times:—

The Westminster Gazette mentions the curious fact, for which the writer of this paragraph can vouch, that the late Hon. Francis Fitzgerald, who was for nearly twenty years a Baron of the Exchequer in Ireland, never even once pronounced the death sentence, and that the present Lord Morris, who was on the Irish Judicial Bench from 1867 till 1889, never hanged a criminal. In the cases in which—and they were few—he pronounced sentence of death the prisoner was relieved. An intense dislike to try capital cases is not at all uncommon. The Right Hon. William Saurin, who, early in the nineteenth century, was for no fewer than fourteen years Attorney General for Ireland, refused the great office of Chief Justice of Ireland, with a peerage of the United Kingdom, on the ground that he had a horror of trying a capital case. It is believed, too, that a similar aversion accounted for the resignation of the Attorney-Generalship of England by Sir Wm. Horne in consequence of a disagreement with Lord Brougham and his refusal of a puisne judgeship.

It is also a fact worth noticing that counsel who may be said to have grown old in the practice of criminal law seldom take calmly to the responsi-

lity of even defending prisoners in capital sentence

THE LESSON RECENTLY GIVEN BY MR. JUSTICE Darling to an inattentive jurymen would awaken in others the dreams of school-day discipline. We have no exception to take to Mr. Justice Darling's remedy except, perhaps, this that it seems somewhat invidious to confine it to jurymen alone.

Mr. Justice Darling, in the rival nursery gardeners' case this week, gave a sharp and not unneeded lesson to jurymen on the duty which they owe alike to the Court and to litigants of attending to the evidence, by ordering (with the assent of counsel on both sides) an inattentive jurymen to withdraw from the box. The task of acting as a jurymen is an irksome one, but the law imposes it, and it must be properly discharged. A juror who fails to follow a case that he is engaged in trying to the utmost of his ability displays a lack of civic spirit to put the matter mildly—which is most reprehensible. At the same time a great deal might be done to make the position of jurymen more tolerable. They ought to be provided with better accommodation. England has much to learn in this respect, as the late Baron Huddleston so often pointed out, from her Continental neighbours.

We are always in sympathy with the hard fate of a jurymen, but still we have considerable doubt as to whether an improvement in the accommodation of the jury-box will be more conducive to attention than sleep. Sleep is a judicial failing not confined to jurymen alone. When it proves overpowering or grows into a habit, retirement from judicial work is undoubtedly the safest remedy.

IT IS SO REASONABLE THAT A JUDGE SHOULD NOT IN the course of examination of witnesses make any observations or suggestions impeaching the credibility or otherwise of witnesses in a trial before jury that we do not wonder that an indiscretion of this kind by Mr. Justice Ridley recently met with a prompt rebuff from the Bar and we are at one with our contemporary of the English Law Journal that the judge was more to blame than the counsel in the following instance:—

Conflicts between the Bench and the Bar are, happily, very rare in England, but they would inevitably become common if judges grew accustomed to 'indulge in irrelevant comments upon the evidence while cases were proceeding. With the merits of the case in which Mr. Justice Ridley recently came into collision with the counsel for the defendant we are not concerned. What we desire to point out is a strange departure from the traditions of the Bench. One of the defendant's witnesses while under examination volunteered a statement as brief as it was legitimate, whereupon Mr. Justice Ridley said, 'It is very kind of you to make a statement which you were not asked for.' The defendant's counsel at once made a protest against this interruption, which was calculated to prejudice his client's case. It was, in our opinion, a very proper protest for him to make. The credibility of the witness was a matter entirely for the jury, and Mr. Justice Ridley's statement was even more gratuitous than that which he rebuked.

WE NOTICED IN OUR ISSUE OF MAY 13, (p. 181n.) the announcement made by the Lord Chief Justice of England as to the rule the judges proposed to follow in respect of applications for postponements of cases. He said that on good cause being shewn a case will be placed at the bottom of the list. Mr. Justice Buckley, however, took occasion lately to explain the principle on which postponements should be granted in original suits which may be already on the list. In his opinion the expenses of applications for postponement to the parties, the effect of their grant on other suitors whose cases may be on the same list, as also whether it is for the purposes of a fair trial, have all to be considered before allowing a case to stand over.

The applications to the court for actions to stand over (applications made in general for the convenience of the parties) are so numerous that I desire to state the principles upon which I deal with them. The expense of these applications must be considerable, and, if the rules which I observe are known, expense may in many cases be saved. In dealing with the business I desire as far as possible so to conduct it as to put all parties concerned to the least inconvenience. That result is, I think, best attained by ensuring as far as possible the continuity of the list. This continuity may be broken by causes beyond the control of the court and sometimes of the parties. Actions may become abated by death or other cause; actions may be settled; actions may for good reasons be directed to stand over, as, for instance, that a commission to take evidence is issued and until it is executed the action cannot be tried. Against these contingencies it is impossible to provide. But where the parties to an action ask that it may stand over for their convenience, or for any reason which is not one which affects the fair trial of the action, the application, if acceded to, is one which interferes unfairly with the continuity of the list, for the convenience or benefit of one suitor to the inconvenience or detriment of others. In witness actions a large number of parties, witnesses, and others have of necessity to hold themselves at the disposal of the court when the action shall happen to be reached, and, to render the uncertainty which thus necessarily exists as small as possible, it is desirable that there should be as far as possible certainty as to the number of actions which stand before them for trial. I do not, therefore, allow actions to stand over simply because all parties agree, or for any reason not addressed to the fair trial of the action. I reserve to myself full liberty to deal with any particular case as I think the circumstances justify. If an action were a long way down the list and could not be reached, say, for six weeks, I should accept a less reason than would be required if it were within a short distance of being heard. But, in any case, I require a reason sufficient to justify an interference with what would otherwise be the order of the list. I make this statement with a view to discouraging applications, which I think it my duty to discourage, because they are applications which invite me to consider the convenience of one suitor at the expense of the inconvenience of others. I hope that applications for actions to stand over will not be made unless there exists a reason bringing the case within the principles which I have indicated.

THE BENGAL TENANCY ACT.

II.

Where a raiyat surrenders his holding, the land-lord is entitled to re-enter by ejecting the under-raiyat, if he is not protected by sec. 85 or sec. 86, cl. (d), i.e., by raiyati lease by a registered instrument for 9 years. Nilkant Chakt v. Ghatoo Sheikh (4 C. W. N. 667, Macpherson and Stevens, JJ.).

A common manager, appointed under the provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act, has power to mortgage property with the permission of the District Judge; and while the common management exists, the powers of the co-owners must be regarded as in abeyance, and therefore a mortgage created by a co-owner during the existence of the common management cannot in any way interfere with, or derogate from, the rights created under any transaction by the manager in respect of the joint property. Amar Chandra Kundu v. Roy Goloke Chandra Chowdhuri (4 C. W. N. 769, Amcer Ali and Brett, JJ.). Their Lordships have relied upon Rule 3 of the rules of the High Court made under sec. 100 which is to the effect that—"No manager shall have power to sell or mortgage any property, nor shall he grant or renew a lease for any period exceeding three years without the express sanction of the District Judge." Sec. 98, cl. (3), however, provides that the manager "shall, subject to the control of the District Judge, have, for the purposes of management, the same powers as the co-owners." It may be questioned whether the limitations, for the purposes of management, would include the right to sell or a mortgage.

Sec. 144 has no bearing upon the question of the nature of the suit; it determines the jurisdiction within which suits are to be instituted, and a suit by a tenant against a landlord under sec. 75 for the recovery of a sum which he claims in respect of excess payments made by him in respect of rent is cognizable by a Small Cause Court. Rango Roy v. Frederick Holloway (4 C. W. N. 95, Rampini and Hill, JJ.).

Under sec. 102, cl. (4), the special conditions and incidents, if any, of the tenancy are to be recorded in a settlement proceeding. A right of way by one tenant over the land of another is not a condition or incident within the meaning of this section and therefore need not be recorded. Hara Mohan Roy v. Pran Nath Mitter (4 C. W. N. 127: 27 Cal. 364, Rampini and Wilkins, JJ.).

A trustee to whom by a trust deed certain properties including a decree for rent is assigned is not an assignee within the meaning of sec. 148, cl. (4), and is therefore competent to apply for execution. Chhatraput Singh v. Gopi Chand Bothra (4 C. W. N. 446, Macpherson and Amcer Ali, JJ.).

Sec. 153 of the Act relates to appeals. No appeal or second appeal is provided for from certain decrees or orders in suits for rent. It has been decided that the term

'order' used in sec. 153 not only includes such an order. Gagan Chand v. Casperz (4 C. W. N. 44, Banerjee and Wilkins, JJ.), but also one made in an execution proceeding—as the term 'suit' in the section includes proceedings in execution of the decree made in the suit. Syama Charan v. Debendra Nath (4 C. W. N. 269, Banerjee and Stevens, JJ.).

Sec. 167 lays down the procedure for annulling encumbrances when a tenure or holding is sold for arrears of rent. From the wording of the section it is not clear whether any notice is necessary when the encumbrancer and purchaser are one and the same. A conflict of opinion has arisen on this question. Amcer Ali and Brett, JJ., in the case of Mastullah Mandal v. Gyan Mamud Sah (4 C. W. N. 735) dissenting from Golak Chunder Das v. Ram Sunker Dutt (4 C. W. N. 268, Macpherson and Stevens, JJ.) have held that the purchaser contemplated by sec. 167 is a purchaser independently of the encumbrancer, and where the encumbrancer himself purchases the property encumbered to him, in execution of a decree for arrears of rent, it is not necessary for him to give notice of annulment of his encumbrance under sec. 167 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. In a notice to annul an encumbrance it is not necessary to give the particulars as to area and rent of the land. Jagabandhu Majumdar v. Rashed Manjan Dassya (4 C. W. N. 261, Rampini and Pratt, JJ.).

There was a conflict of opinion with regard to a question as to whether a claim to a property attached in execution of a decree for arrears of rent would lie if the claim is adverse to the tenure. Rampini and Pratt, JJ., dissenting from Petham, C. J., and Cunningham, J., in Jagabandhu v. Dinu (4 C. W. N. 734) held that such claim was not maintainable whether the claim was adverse to the tenure or not. Makbul Ahmed v. Rakhal Das Hazra (4 C. W. N. 732). But the question was referred to a Full Bench by Maclean, C. J., and Banerjee, J., in Anwita Lal Bose v. Nemai Chand (4 C. W. N. cclx), and it was finally settled by a majority of the Full Bench that no such claim was maintainable.

Sec. 188 of the Bengal Tenancy Act provides that when two or more persons are joint landlords anything which the landlord is required or authorised to do must be done by all the persons jointly. It has been settled that this section does not apply to a suit for rent as a landlord is not required or authorised to sue for rent under the Bengal Tenancy Act. But when a landlord is to apply for appraisalment under sec. 69 all the landlords must join, Nukheda v. Ripu Mardan (4 C. W. N. 239, Ghose and Rampini, JJ.). Sec. 188 has, however, no application when the principal Defendant was the tenant of two joint landlords and there being a partition between them, each of the joint landlords brought a separate suit for his share of the rent against the principal Defendant by making the co-sharer landlord a party. Raj Narain Mitter v. Ekadasi Bag (4 C. W. N. 494: 27 Cal. 479, Rampini and Wilkins, JJ.).

The Local Government has framed rules as regards the service of notices. In a suit for ejectment requiring a notice to quit, a service of notice by post was held to be bad as being not in accordance with the rules prescribed by Government. (Rule 3, Chap. I of the Rules).

The two years' limitation applicable to a suit to recover possession of land claimed by the Plaintiff as an occupancy raiyat is applicable where a fractional or co-sharer landlord dispossess the raiyat. Parameswar v. Kali Mohun (4 C. W. N. 801, Rampini and Pratt, JJ.).

When the dispossession is not by the landlord but under his authority, this article would apply; Chintamani v. Upendra (4 C. W. N. 326, Rampini and Wilkins, JJ.); this article would also apply when the dispossession is not by the landlord primarily but by a third person and who subsequently takes a settlement from the landlord. Harakumar v. Sheikh Nasaruddin (4 C. W. N. 665, Amser Ali and Brett, JJ.).

CHANCERY DIVISION.—Re MEGRET, TWEEDIE v. MAUNDER. Before MR. JUSTICE COZENS HARDY. 21st January 1901.

Settlement on marriage by English woman with a Frenchman—Conflict of law—Locus contractus.

In re HERNANDO (27 Ch. D. 284) followed.

One Louis Megret married in 1862 a domiciled English woman, named Rachel Davis. He had a French domicile. In contemplation of marriage the only property settled was by the lady. It was placed on trust, the lady having power of appointment for such person or persons as she whether sole or covert should by deed or Will appoint and in default for her sole use. She died in 1876 leaving three daughters and one son. By Will she gave a certain sum to her son and one-third of the residue of her property to each of her daughters.

The question was whether the French or the English law applied, for by French law the husband would be entitled to a certain share of the trust property.

The learned Judge states in his judgment that the wife by her Will purported to exercise the power in a manner which would not be permissible by the law of France if she were dealing with her own property. The settlement would be nugatory unless the English law applied. The case of re Hernando had decided both points raised (1) whether the Will was a good exercise of the power, and (2) a good disposition of the property given for the wife's separate use and he must decide in accordance with that ruling and pronounce in favour of the English law.

Mr. Vernon Smith, Q. C., and Mr. Wood for the husband.

Mr. Theobald, Q. C., and Mr. Martin for the son.

PRIVY COUNCIL.

[APPEAL FROM BENGAL.]

LORD HOBHOUSE.	JOSEPHINE ROSE HARRISS
LORD MACNAGHTEN.	and anr., Plaintiffs,
LORD ROBERTSON.	Appellants,
SIR R. COUCH.	v.
SIR FORD NORTH.	EDWARD BROWN and ors.,
1901.	Defendants, Respondents.
1, May.

Will, construction of—"Eldest son," meaning of—Appeal heard ex parte—Application for re hearing by Respondent.

This was an appeal against a decision of the Calcutta High Court reversing that of the Sub-Judge of Barisal.

The suit was brought by A. E. Harriess (now represented by the Appellants) as assignee of the interests of Flora Williams and her husband George Williams, against the executor of the Will of one Thomas Paul D'Silva, to have the Will construed and for a declaration that he as assignee was entitled to a moiety of the estate left by the testator.

The Will is dated 5th January 1857. The testator died on the following month unmarried and childless. Cecilia the wife of F. M. Proby, and the said Flora were two daughters of his brother J. Manuel D'Silva. Flora married George Williams in 1878. She had an infant son born in August 1883 who lived only a few hours. The husband and wife subsequently lived apart. On 31st March 1882 Flora sold half of her interests to three Mahomedan gentlemen who were the 3rd, 4th and 5th Defendants to the suit. The 5th Defendant transferred his interests to Amal Chand Pal, the 6th Defendant.

On 12th August 1892 Flora executed a deed to Amrita Lal Banerji by which after reciting her previous assignment she assigned to him for Rs. 3,000 the residue of her interest in the moiety of the testator's estate, and also her allowance of Rs. 50 per month.

On the same date George Williams assigned to the same individual any right he had as sole heir to his son to receive the moiety of the testator's estate, the consideration was Rs. 4,000.

Amrita Lal on same day sold to Plaintiffs for Rs. 9,000 what he had acquired under the two last-mentioned deeds.

George Williams died soon after the assignments, and no further issue was born to them.

Cecilia Proby had a son born on 17th May 1858, who lived to reach 21 years and to whom on his attaining majority one moiety of the estate was handed over by the executor.

The principal question was the right construction of the 11th clause of the Will.

The Plaintiff's case was that, on the birth of the infant son of Flora Williams, the moiety of the testator's estate vested in him and on his death passed to his father. The Defendants said there was an intestacy as to this moiety which passed equally to Flora and Cecilia.

The 11th clause is as follows:—

"After carrying out all the directions and paying the legacies specified in the abovementioned paragraphs, all my ancestral and self-acquired moveable and immoveable properties that shall remain, as also the moveable and immoveable properties left by Domingo Manuel Anthony D'Silva and which I have inherited, shall descend in equal shares to the eldest son to be born to each of the daughters of my late brother Janni Manuel D'Silva (namely) Mrs. Cecilia Proby and Miss Flora D'Silva who are now alive. The sons of those daughters (of my brother) shall, after their birth, remain under the control and guardianship of the executor Saheb until they attain majority at the expiry of 21 (twenty-one) years, and whenever the eldest son of any of the ladies shall attain majority, the executor will make over his share to him to his satisfaction. Of my two brother's daughters I give to the elder (namely) Cecilia Proby the Bbarpasha Tofelbari dwelling-house inherited by me, and to the younger (namely) Miss Flora the house at Shibpore. But if, for the purposes of management of my properties, it should be necessary for the executor to stay in any one of the said two houses, there shall be raised no objection to his doing so. And as regards the ornaments and tables and almirahs and other articles that I have in my custody and under my control, I give the same to the said daughters (of my brother) in equal shares. The elder of them is married. Immediately upon my death, she will get her half share of the same from the executor. The younger one has not been married yet. She is under age. When she arrives at marriageable age, she will be given in marriage to a suitable person with the consent and according to the views of the executor. At the time of her marriage, the executor will give her the half share she is entitled to, and as regards the sum of Rs. 50 (fifty) a month which has been fixed for the maintenance of each of the said two daughters (of my brother), the elder of them will be paid her monthly allowance month after month. The younger shall be sent to school and her necessary expenses at the school will be met from her fixed monthly allowance. Finis."

The Courts in India in effect held that nothing vested in the infant son of Flora and George Williams because he had not lived till he was 21.

There was also a question whether the said transfer by Flora Williams to Amrita Lal Banerji was ineffectual to convey any interest to him.

Mr. Asquith, K. C., and Mr. Mayne for the Appellant.

Mr. Asquith argued, that the "eldest son" took a vested interest, there was no gift over. The gift was not made contingent. There cannot be two eldest sons. The High Court was wrong in coming to the conclusion that it meant the eldest son living and not the first-born son; whether the correct translation was "shall descend" or "shall devolve" or "shall go to" the vesting was on the birth of the eldest son. It was an erroneous construction to say that only when the two eldest sons of his nieces should attain majority were their respective shares to vest. On the other point Mr. Mayne was to follow, but their Lordships intimated that they did not consider it necessary to hear Mr. Mayne.

The Respondents were not represented by counsel.

Their Lordships reserved their judgment.

On the 11th May, before Lords Macnaghten, Davey, Lindley and Sir Richard Couch and Sir Ford North, an application was made on behalf of one of the Respondents for the re-hearing of the appeal.

In the petition of the Respondent Cecilia Proby to the Right Hon'ble the Lords of the Judicial Committee it was stated that the record in the above appeal arrived in London in August 1890.

That Appellants' solicitors entered appearance at the Privy Council Office on 6th November 1900. That by the mail which left Calcutta on 7th March last the Calcutta agents of Petitioner's London solicitors Messrs. T. L. Wilson & Co. wrote them stating that Petitioner's mukhtear had called on them and had promised to remit funds to enable Messrs. T. L. Wilson & Co. to appear by counsel on her behalf at the hearing of the appeal.

That on receipt of such letter Messrs. T. L. Wilson & Co. wrote to Appellants' London solicitors on 26th March asking them to consent to the appeal standing out of the list for May into the June list.

That Appellants' solicitors declined to give the consent.

That Petitioners' solicitors then on 1st April cabled to their Calcutta agents Messrs. Wilson and Chatterjee & Hearing 3rd May."

That the appeal was heard ex parte by their Lordships on the 1st May, and judgment was reserved. That on the 2nd May Messrs. T. L. Wilson & Co. received the following cable from Calcutta: "appear for Respondent Cecilia." That thereupon Messrs. T. L. Wilson & Co. wired back that appeal had been argued and judgment reserved.

That on 3rd May the said Calcutta agents cabled back instructions to make an application for a hearing, and Petitioner prayed their Lordships to permit counsel to be heard on her behalf in support of the judgment of the High Court.

Mr. C. W. Arathoon who appeared on behalf of the Petitioner pointed out that this appeal had come on for hearing within 9 months of the arrival of the record and referred to the facts mentioned in the petition.

SIR RICHARD COUCH.—If the application is granted, you will have to pay the costs of the re-hearing in any event. Are you agreeable to its standing over for you to consider that?

Mr. Arathoon.—Yes, that order will suit me very well. Mr. Mayne appears to oppose.

Mr. Mayne urged that it will establish a bad precedent, if Respondents were allowed after they find out that an appeal is going against them to make such applications, it was likely that they would frequently act in this manner. He further pointed out that leave to appeal was granted so far back as February 1899, and there was no reason shown for any indulgence in this case. Any way if the application is granted then costs must be paid of the re-hearing.

LORD MACNAGHTEN.—Their Lordships always regret having to hear an appeal ex parte.

After consideration Lord Macnaghten said the prayer will be refused with costs.

CALCUTTA HIGH COURT.

[ORDINARY ORIGINAL CIVIL JURISDICTION.]

Suit No. 864 of 1900.

STANLEY, J.	}	GURMUK ROY and ors.,
1901.		"
3, June.		TUBARAM and others.

Practice—Inspection of documents—Sealing up—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), secs. 129, 130.

This was an application upon a summons taken out by the Defendants for an order that the Plaintiffs do produce and leave at the office of their attorneys such portions of the documents sealed by them as may be found by the Court to relate to the matter in question in this suit, and that the Defendants, their attorneys and agents, be at liberty to inspect and peruse the same and to take copies and abstracts thereof and extracts therefrom as the Defendants may be advised.

This was a suit instituted by the Plaintiffs for the recovery of a sum of money alleged to be due by the Defendants for principal and interest in respect of a certain commission agency business. The Plaintiffs alleged that they had acted as the commission agents in Calcutta of the Defendants and in the course of such business had purchased on their behalf and sent to them various goods ordered by them, that they had submitted yearly true and faithful accounts of such dealings to the Defendants who had from time to time acknowledged the correctness of such accounts; that on the 17th of October 1899 the Defendants adjusted the Plaintiffs' accounts and signed the same and a sum of Rs. 6,052-3-9 was found due, that the Plaintiffs subsequently discovered that by some mistake they had omitted to charge the Defendants in the said account with a sum of Rs. 500 for principal and Rs. 98-15-3 for interest, that they had brought this omission to the notice of the Defendants who had admitted those sums to be due in addition to Rs. 6,052-3-9. That subsequently they had further dealings with the Defendants, a true and faithful account of which they submitted to the Defendants.

The Defendants by their written statement alleged, inter alia, that the Plaintiffs had charged higher prices for goods than what had been actually paid for by them although it had been agreed that the Plaintiffs were to charge the Defendants only the cost price of the goods and they sought to re-open the whole account. On the 1st February an order was made upon the Plaintiffs to file their affidavit of documents, and on the 20th of March they filed their affidavit by which they claimed "the right of sealing up such portions of documents mentioned in Nos. 1 to 27 of Part II of the schedule as do not relate to the matter in question in this suit."

The Defendants now applied for the order set out above upon an affidavit of one of the Defendants in which he stated, inter alia, that so far as he had been able to ascertain particulars, the Plaintiffs had fraudulently overcharged the Defendants with regard to certain items which were set out in the affidavit and "that there are entries in the account books of the Plaintiffs which would shew the price at which, the time when, and the person from whom, the goods supplied to my said firm were purchased. That such entries the Plaintiffs have wrongfully sealed up and did not allow me to inspect them although asked."

The Plaintiffs opposed the application, and in their affidavit in opposition they set out certain entries which, they said, were the only entries in the Plaintiffs' books relating to the matters in question in this suit. They submitted that the Defendants had no right to inspect any entries in the Plaintiffs' books prior to the settlement of accounts on the 17th October 1899, and they denied that they had in any way overcharged or wrongly charged the Defendants.

Mr. Jackson for the Defendants referred to the Annual Practice for 1900, p. 376, Order 3, R. 1.

Mr. Garth for the Plaintiff.—They are bound by our statement that there are no other entries relating to the matters in question in this suit. We have given inspection of all entries which are relevant and we are entitled to seal up the rest. See Nritto— moysé Dasse v. Soohul Chunder Law (I. L. R. 23 Cal. 117) and Amarendra Nath Chatterjee v. Kally Kissen Tagore (2 C. W. N. 17).

Mr. Jackson.—These cases are not in point. The question whether those entries are relevant or not is not for the Plaintiffs to determine but for the Court. The usual practice is to appoint an officer to look into the entries. See Heeralall Rukhit v. Ram Surin Lall (I. L. R. 4 Cal. 835) and Mughee Bibee v. Heeralal (Unreported, Sale, J., 2nd May).

STANLEY, J.—Let the books be produced before me on Saturday next for the purposes of inspection under sec. 130, Civ. P. C.

Messrs. Leslie and Hinds, Attorneys for the Plaintiffs.

Babu Kally Mohan Rukhit for the Defendants.

In the matter of the BOARD OF EXAMINERS FOR PLEADERSHIP AND MUKHTERSHIP
and

In the matter of ACT XVIII OF 1879 OF THE GOVERNOR-GENERAL OF INDIA IN COUNCIL
and

In the matter of the SPECIFIC RELIEF ACT (I OF 1877) OF THE GOVERNOR-GENERAL OF INDIA IN COUNCIL.

Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), sec. 45—Board of Examiner for Pleadship and Mukhtership—Legal Practitioners Act (XVIII of 1879), sec. 6—Power of the Board to debar a man for ever from appearing at an examination.

This was a rule obtained by one Rudra Narain Roy on the 2nd February 1901 calling on the Board of Examiners for the Pleadship and Mukhtership to show cause "why the said Board should not allow the said Rudra Narain Roy to appear at the ensuing examination for Mukhtership and to appear at any other similar future examination to be held by the said Board upon the said Rudra Narain Roy fulfilling the conditions necessary under the law to qualify him to appear at such examinations." It appeared that the Petitioner passed the Entrance Examination of the Calcutta University in 1885. In 1891 he was tried before the Presidency Magistrate on a charge of having personated one Hemango Chandra Kiula at the Entrance Examination of that year; the charge was heard and after hearing the evidence the Magistrate was not satisfied with the identity of the Petitioner with the person said to have personated and he was discharged. In November 1892 he sent in the necessary certificates to the Board of Examiners and offered himself as a candidate for Mukhtership at the then next examination to be held in 1893. That Board investigated his case and in the exercise of their discretion came to the conclusion that he was not a fit and proper person to be admitted to the examination. In 1895 the Petitioner again applied to the Board to have his case reconsidered, but the Board saw no sufficient grounds for altering the decision which had already been passed in the matter.

In 1899 he again applied for permission to appear at the examination held in 1900 and was, through a mistake, allowed to appear but failed to pass.

In November 1900 he again applied for such permission and sent in the necessary certificates of moral character but such permission was refused. It appeared that the Board were of opinion that they would not be justified in investigating a matter which had already been disposed of and consequently they refused to entertain the application or to examine the certificates of character presented to them and refused to allow him to be examined. The Petitioner thereupon applied for and obtained this rule under sec. 45 of the Specific Relief Act.

Mr. O'Kienly shewed cause for the Board.—This application does not come within sec. 45 of the Specific Relief Act. As the rule is framed the Court has no jurisdiction. The rules for the examination are made under sec. 6 of the Legal Practitioners Act and under those rules it is for the Board to be satisfied that a candidate is a fit and proper person to be admitted. This Court cannot interfere with the decision of the Board, it can only direct them to do what the law declares they should do. But if they have done that and gone fully into the matter, this Court has no jurisdiction to order them to go over it again. In 1893 they went very fully into the matter, and they came to the conclusion that the applicant was not a fit and proper person. [Court.—The Board is entitled to say that a particular candidate is not a fit and proper person for a particular examination, but are they entitled to say that he shall never be entitled to appear at any examination?]

Mr. Sinha (for Mr. A. Chaudhuri) and Mr. K. Chaudhuri in support of the rule.—The mistake the Board has made is in thinking that they are bound to follow the decision of their predecessors. They are not bound by that decision. They are bound to consider each case on its merits, and their refusing to do so is a complete refusal to exercise jurisdiction.

Held—It is for the Board and not for the Court to determine the fitness of a candidate, but before the Board can debar him from presenting himself as a candidate, they must examine his fitness at the present time. It is not consonant with justice to debar a man, once debarred, for ever as a man not fit and proper.

The application under the circumstances is sustainable.

Ordered—That the applicant be at liberty to present to the Board the certificates required by the rules and regulations. The Board is to consider those certificates and if satisfied that the candidate possesses the qualifications prescribed by the rules, they are to allow him to present himself for examination.

Mr. J. C. Dutt, Attorney for the Applicant.

The Government Solicitor, Attorney for the Board.

Rule made absolute without costs.

Judgment, 12, June.	and others, Defendants,

This was an appeal against the decision of Babu Syam Chand Roy, Sub-Judge of Khulna, dated the 24th August 1898, modifying the decree of Babu Upendra Nath Bhanja, Munsif of Khulna, dated the 16th March 1898.

The facts of the case material to this report are shortly as follows:—Plaintiff alleged that he and the pro forma Defendants held possession of their ancestral jumma under Defendant No. 1, their landlord, that Plaintiff's share was 4 ans. and the remaining share belonged to Defendants Nos. 2, 3 and 4; that the Defendant No. 1 threatened the Plaintiff with oppression and further threatened him saying that he would resume khas possession of the jumma and settle the land held by the Plaintiff with someone else, if the Plaintiff did not execute and register a bond and a kabuliyat for the entire jumma at an enhanced rate of rent; that the Defendant No. 1 compelled him to execute such a kabuliyat as well as a separate bond for Rs. 652 on account of bonus mentioned in the kabuliyat; that the Defendant No. 1 had no right or authority to settle the entire quantity of land with the Plaintiff, and therefore the present suit was brought for the cancellation of the kabuliyat and the bond.

This suit which was suit No. 51 of 1897 in the Court of the Munsif of Khulna was tried with another suit No. 151 of 1897 in the same Court, which was brought by Defendants Nos. 2 to 4 in the first mentioned suit against the Plaintiff and Defendant No. 1 of suit No. 51 to obtain a declaration that they were entitled to a 12 ans. share in the lands to which the kabuliyat and the bond related and that those documents were not binding on them. The first Court dismissed the first-mentioned suit, but decreed the second declaring that the Plaintiffs in that suit, i.e., Defendants Nos. 2, 3 and 4 in the present suit were entitled to 12 ans. share in the land in question and that they were not bound by the bond and the kabuliyat. The decree in the second suit was not appealed against, but there was an appeal from the decree in the suit out of which the present appeal arose. The lower Appellate Court while affirming the finding of the first Court that the case of fraud and coercion set up by the Plaintiff was not made out, modified its decree by limiting the operation of the kabuliyat and the bond to a 4 ans. share and declaring them binding, as against the Plaintiff only to the extent of one-fourth share.

Defendant No. 1 preferred this second appeal, and it was contended on his behalf that the Court of Appeal below was wrong in law in modifying the decree of the first Court and declaring the documents operative only as regards a fourth share which was the interest of the Plaintiff. It was argued that as the suit was based on the ground of fraud, and that that ground was not made out, the suit ought to have been dismissed altogether, and it was further argued that even if it was open to the Plaintiff to raise the question of the extent of his share, he should still have been held bound by his contract to pay the increased rent mentioned in the kabuliyat in its entirety and in support of this contention the case of Burhamuddin Howladar v. Mohan Chandra Guha (8 C. L. R. 511) was relied upon.

Their LORDSHIPS in dismissing the appeal observed:—

The Appellant's contention was not sound. The suit was based mainly, no doubt, on the ground of fraud; but the Plaintiff also alleged in his plaint that his share in the tenure in question was only one-fourth, and that the remaining three-fourths belonged to the Defendants Nos. 2 to 4; and that allegation having been found satisfied, the Court of Appeal below was right in holding that the Plaintiff could not be made liable for rent or bonus in respect of any share exceeding his own one-fourth share.

Burhamuddin Howladar v. Mohan Chandra Guha (8 C. L. R. 511) distinguished.

Dr. Rash Behary Ghosh, Babus Benode Behary Mukerjee and Kritanta Kumar Bose for the Appellant.

Babu Surendra Chandra Sen for the Respondent.

Appeal dismissed.

REPORTS (See Index.)

THE THIRD QUARTERLY SITTINGS OF THE CALCUTTA Court of Criminal Sessions will commence in the High Court on and from the first of July next and will be presided over by Mr. Justice Pratt.

AS WE WERE GOING TO PRESS LAST WEEK WE HAD only time to take a passing notice of the letter from the Chamber of Commerce to the Government of India on the question of some much-needed reforms in the distribution and disposal of work on the Original Side of the High Court. The suggestions of the Chamber of Commerce are almost precisely the same as those that have been put forward by us in these columns in consultation with the leading members of both branches of the profession. The judges on the Original Side have for years felt that the abolition of the important offices of Master and Taxing Officer has been a great hardship to suitors and to those who have to look after their interest. As we have already in our previous issues (Vol. III Notes, pp. 129, 181—3, 190, 225 and Vol. IV, pp. 2, 13—15, 25) gone into the history of those offices and explained why they should be revived, it is unnecessary for us now to go over the same ground once again. But since the Chamber of Commerce is now moving in the matter it may serve some useful purpose to consider the stage at which the question stands at the present moment. Since the retirement of the late Registrar, his Lordship the Chief Justice has consulted the learned judges and has had considerable opportunities of ascertaining the views of the profession with regard to the matter and fortified with such opinion has but lost little time in representing to the Government of India as to how matters, as they at present stand on the Original Side, may be adequately remedied.

THE QUESTION HAS BEEN PROMINENTLY BEFORE THE public for nearly two years and during this time the leading organs of public opinion have been untiring in their endeavour to draw the attention of the Government as to the urgency of the reforms. We have often wondered why no response has been received yet from the Government of India with regard to such an important matter. The only explanation that suggests itself to us is that it may be due to financial considerations which, as we all know, is often allowed to block the way to many urgent reforms. When the Government feels disposed to postpone a question from such considerations it is often a hopeless task to cause other considerations to prevail. We had almost begun to despair because of such reasons when the representation of the Chamber of Commerce, representing as it does the opinion of a body of practical business-men, has roused in us the hope that the Government may at last be induced to recognise that the question cannot any longer be postponed without a break down in the offices and without bringing business on the Original Side to a dead-lock.

THE URGENCY HAS BECOME MORE PRONOUNCED SINCE his Lordship the Chief Justice has very considerably placed the services of a third judge on the Original Side and by a very judicious redistribution of the work has succeeded in relieving to some extent the congested state of the cause lists. For instance, by such arrangements, very simple liquidated claim-matters which were hanging fire for years are now being rapidly disposed of. Still the general list is in such a congested condition that even three judges, with all their untiring devotion to their work, are unable to make any impression on it. The recent run on the list we may leave out of consideration for the present. Cases struck off cannot be regarded as disposed of and it yet remains to be seen how many of these may hereafter be restored. But still there can be no question that but for a timely third Court, business on the Original Side would have come to a stand-still, especially, having regard to the heavy suits that recently came up for hearing before same of the benches. If one more Court, on the Original Side has been a source of great relief, it has also meant an increased amount of ministerial work and that has necessarily brought into prominence the question of strengthening the ministerial staff and the expansion and the reorganisation of the Original Side offices.

IF WITH TWO COURTS AND NO MASTER OR OFFICIAL Referee to dispose of the References, many suits on the Original Side had reached the notoriety of Jarndyce v. Jarndyce, it may easily be imagined how many more of these are likely to accumulate when there are three courts sitting. Similarly when there is no Taxing Officer to tax the costs in suits disposed of by two courts how are the officers, who are charged with these duties, to get on with the work from three Courts? We welcome, therefore, the timely representation made by the Chamber of Commerce and also the prompt support that it has received from the public press. As for the rest, his Lordship the Chief Justice has, we understand, already taken considerable trouble to ascertain the needs on the Original Side of the Court and we are very thankful to him for the improvements he has already effected and also for those that he intends to introduce, if the Government place him in a position to do so. We therefore think that no further time should be lost over the matter by the Government of India and that the only question that now remains for them to consider is merely one of "ways and means" and as regards that there need be no difficulty, as the Chamber of Commerce very pertinently points out, that the administration of justice in Bengal is a large source of profit and the Government has only got to yield up a portion of that gain, to none of which they can legitimately lay any claim for other purpose.

BARRISTERS' CLERKS ARE VERY DIFFERENT BEINGS IN England from what they are here. They have various accomplishments, amongst which short-hand is not the least, which come of great assistance to their masters. They are also a thinking, feeling and intelligent lot who have founded societies for their mutual benefit and culture which, we might say, would do credit even to the legal practitioners in this country to emulate. It is no wonder therefore that individual members of such a body of men should at times be fired with ambition and succeed in working up their way to the very first rank of the legal profession and deserve the highest honours that the practice of law can confer. As an instance of this kind, Sir Francis Jeune, speaking at the annual dinner of the Law Clerk's Society, pointed to the remarkable career of Lord Justice Rolt. The President of the Probate Division said:—

He could not think of the society without remembering his own legal godfather, the late Mr. Justice Rolt, who, rose from a very humble position in the law to almost its highest honours. He began life as a junior clerk to a barrister, and he had, as he himself often told him, two pieces of good fortune. The first was that his master was a man of very great ability, and the second that he was also an incorrigible and irreclaimable drunkard. The result was that before very long Mr. Rolt had not only learned how to do the work as well as the master, but he very soon found he could do the work in place of the master, with the result that the clients discovered his ability, and in due course of time he became Attorney-General and became Lord Justice, and he represented his country for a period of something like twenty-five years.

THE LORD CHIEF JUSTICE SPEAKING AT THE SAME dinner gave some humorous account of how barristers' clerks, not unlike their brethren in this country, are apt to identify themselves with their masters. He said:—

He could keep them there half the night telling them stories of barristers' clerks. He would only tell them one. A very distinguished man, who was afterwards Lord Chancellor, came back at the end of the Long Vacation and said to his clerk, a well-known character—some of those present no doubt knew whom he meant and might remember him (there was a vacancy in the old Court of Common Pleas): "Is there any news?" "No, sir; not much," was the answer. "Isn't there any news at all?" "No. They have been asking me if we are going to take the puisne judgeship." "Well," said the barrister, "what did you say?" "I said, 'Thank God, we have not fallen so low as that!'" That was a literal fact without a word of exaggeration or invention.

This, of course, referred to, Lord Cairns and his clerk.

TO MATCH THE HUMOUR OF THE ABOVE WE COULD mention an incident which happened nearer home when two barristers on being appointed to officiate as puisne judges their clerks gave a dinner to their brethren of the same calling and everything was going on merrily till an after-dinner controversy arose as to whether the clerk whose master had taken seat on the Appellate Side was to take precedence over his rival whose master was deputed to do work on the Original Side. The former, however, being a younger and a more powerful man was about to resort to argumentum baculinum when the latter very logically conceded to him the precedence.

THE FOLLOWING STORY NARRATED BY THE LORD CHIEF Justice, on the same occasion, will surely be appreciated by those for whom it is meant:—

A leading solicitor, some years ago, was met by some fashionable client, who did not know much about the business, and he said: "Oh, Mr. So-and-so, what an anxious life you must have! What a responsible life! How can you go about with all this great responsibility on you?" "Oh!" said the solicitor, "I am the most irresponsible being in the whole world. I leave all the law to my counsel and all the practice to my clerk."

Review.

THE GAVEL AND THE MACE, or Parliamentary Law in Easy Chapters. By Frank Warren Hackett. Published by Messrs. Sweet and Maxwell, Ltd., 3 Chancery Lane, Law Publishers. 1901.

This is a very pleasant addition to one's Law Library and affords much interesting reading even for those who have no love for legal literature. It deals with the practice of various English representative bodies and gives a short and entertaining account of Parliamentary Procedure. There is a great deal of humour in its pages, and the style is free and easy and is nowhere marred by legal technicalities. The book is full of pretty anecdotes and conveys some very sound advice, though it be in the lighter vein. Here is a short quotation:—

"A fundamental principle governing debate at every stage is, that the speaker must confine his remarks to the question at issue. He must not ramble. This requirement is kept before the mind of the legislator usually by means of a clock, with a large dial, fixed at some conspicuous point in the chamber. . . . If you, my young friend, in your efforts at speech-making discover yourself as it were 'floundering around' do not be discouraged. Remember Father Taylor, who in a burst of inspiration once cried out from his pulpit, at the Sailor's Bethel, 'I have lost my nominative case, dear brethren, but I am going to glory just the same.'" The book is beautifully got up in every respect. The paper, printing and binding display an artistic finish which should be seen to be appreciated and as for its contents, we have no hesitation in saying that it is an eminently readable book.

English Notes.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—KEIGHLEY MAXTED AND CO. v. DURANT. Before the LORD CHANCELLOR, LORDS MACNAGHTEN, SHAND, DAVEY, LORD JAMES OF HEREFORD, LORD BRAMPTON, LORD ROBERTSON and LORD LINDLEY. 20th May 1900.

A contract made by one on his own behalf, though intending to buy on behalf of a third person, is not capable of ratification by that third person.

The Appellants were corn merchants at Hull, and a Mr. Wright was their manager and agent. The Respondent, Durant, is a corn merchant at Wakefield trading as Bryant Durant & Co. On the morning of the 11th May 1898 one Roberts received from Durant's brokers a telegram containing an offer from him of certain wheat at a certain price. Later on the same day Roberts had an interview with the said Wright and upon hearing of Durant's offer the two agreed that if Roberts could get the wheat at a certain price they would purchase on joint account, (i.e., of Roberts and the Appellants). Roberts could not get the wheat at the agreed price. Later the same day Roberts, without further communication with the Appellants and apparently purely on his own separate account by an interchange of telegraphic communications with Durant's brokers, concluded a contract for the purchase by him in his own name from Durant of the whole of the wheat at a slightly increased price to that on which the offer was made on the said joint account. At a casual meeting the next day between Wright and Roberts the latter informed Wright of the contract upon which Wright told him to take it, because the wheat was good, though the price was rather high. Roberts did so, but failed to fulfil his contract.

The action was commenced by the Respondent Durant against Roberts and the Appellants for breach of contract in failing to take delivery of the wheat. At the trial Mr Justice Day held that there had been no ratification of the contract by the Appellants and entered judgment for them with costs.

The COURT OF APPEAL, Lord Justices Collins and Romer, (Lord Justice A. L. Smith dissenting) held that there was evidence to go to the jury that Roberts intended to make the contract on behalf of the Appellants, and that the Appellants did in fact ratify the contracts. A new trial was ordered.

The Defendants appealed.

The LORD CHANCELLOR in his judgments stated that the facts were admitted; Roberts had made a contract on his own behalf and without the authority of anyone else. It was a completed contract with ascertained parties and, in his Lordship's opinion, by no principle known to the law, could the present Appellants be made parties to the contract. "I confess I do not see the relevancy of the argument that a contract might be made in the name of an unknown principal and that such a principal may sue and be sued, though the name was not given at the time the contract was made. The fact is that in such a case the contract is made by him, and the disclosure afterwards does not alter or affect the contract actually made. Here it would alter the contract afterwards and make it a different contract. If it is said that it is an anomaly, it certainly is not the only one in our law, and if it was sought to make our laws harmonize by deciding that any proposition which our laws establish involves as a necessary consequence the establishment of every thing that is analogous to it, the result would be very perplexing indeed. I agree with the Master of the Rolls that a long line of decisions has settled the question in favour of the view which he maintains. . . . These are parts of the Roman law which undoubtedly we have made parts of our own and they are binding on us not because they are parts of the Roman law but because they are parts of our own. In this country we have never adopted the Roman law in a wholesale fashion . . . . Our law differs in most important respects from the Roman law.

The appeal must be allowed with costs both here and below." ●

LORD DAVEY in his judgment referred to the authorities and agreed in deciding that a contract made by one on his own behalf, though intending to buy on behalf of a third person was incapable of ratification by that third person.

The other noble Lords concurred.

Mr. Carver, K. C., Mr. Danckwerts, K. C., and Mr. Lush for the Appellants.

Mr. Robson, K. C., and Mr. Scrutton, K. C., for the Respondents.

Appeal allowed with costs.

Right of mortgagee in wrongful possession of ship—Wages of master and crew.

The Defendant had sold the ship to a Company. To secure the payment of certain instalments of the consideration-money the Company had mortgaged it to Defendant. The next instalment of the consideration-money was to be paid to Defendant in September 4th. The Company had chartered the ship to Plaintiff for passenger service, Plaintiff paying all the expenses of the service. The Company having defaulted in paying the said instalment of 4th September, the Defendant, purporting to act under powers contained in his mortgage, seized the ship and paid off the master and crew their wages, on their threatening to arrest the ship for wages due to them. In Plaintiff's action for damages the learned President had held that Defendant was not entitled to seize the vessel because his security was not impaired by the Company's charter to Plaintiff. On this counter-claim by Defendant for the amount he had paid as wages, the learned President decided in favour of the counter-claim being of opinion that the decision in Johnson v. The Royal Mail Steam Packet Company (L. R. 3 C. P. 38) was equally applicable where the mortgagee had been wrong in seizing the ship as when he was right.

Mr. Pollock supported the counter-claim.

Mr. Carver, K. C., for the Plaintiff.

Counter-claim allowed with such costs as were properly attributable to same.

COURT OF APPEAL (THE LORD CHIEF JUSTICE, THE MASTER OF THE RULLS and LORD JUSTICE ROMER), 23rd May 1901.—The Defendants appealed from the above decision of the President and there was also a cross-appeal by Plaintiff. The Court of Appeal as regards the cross-appeal held that without deciding whether under the circumstances the Defendant as mortgagee could recover the amount of the wages paid to the crew, the correspondence proved that there was an implied request on the part of Defendant to Plaintiff to pay the wages to the crew, therefore the cross-appeal failed. The appeal also failed, because on the whole evidence it could not be said that in the circumstances an agreement to run the vessel on half profits impaired the security. In the course of his judgment the Lord Chief Justice referred to Collins v. Lamport (34 L. J. Ch. 196) and Keith v. Burrows (2 App. Cas. 636).

Appeal and cross-appeal dismissed.

C. W. A.

PROBATE AND DIVORCE COURT.—IN THE MATTER OF CHARLES J. PANTON, a law stationer. Before the PRESIDENT. 20th May 1901.

Privileges of a solicitor—Law stationer acting as a solicitor—Mistake, writ of attachment.

THE LAW SOCIETY v. WATERLOO BROTHERS (8 App. Cas. 407) followed.

The Incorporated Law Society in this matter asked for a writ of attachment against Mr. Panton for contempt under 23 and 24 Vict., Cap. 127, sec. 26. The offence stated was that he did acting for a firm of country solicitors call at Somerset House and there not only lodged a form of caveat in a certain pending action, but on the requisition of an official at that office, desiring a London address to be left, he there and then wrote his own name and address. Mr. Panton having done so, informed the country solicitors of what he had done, and next at their suggestion withdrew the caveat. The defence was that Mr. Panton had made a mistake and had acted in ignorance, that upon discovering it, he had expressed deep regret, and stated that nothing was farther from his thoughts than to commit any act the least disrespectful to the Court or to encroach in any way on the privileges of a solicitor, and he complained that before these proceedings were taken he had been given no opportunity of explaining matters. On this hearing it was said that the Law Society did not now press for attachment, but wanted an order for costs.

The learned President was satisfied that a mistake had been made. Mr. Panton was quite within his rights in lodging the caveat, and the error he had fallen into of giving his own name and address, was owing to an error on the part of the Somerset House official asking for a London address, because the name of the country solicitor was quite sufficient. The question had been discussed by Lord Selborne in the above case and there was no ground for the present motion having regard to the observations in that case. It would be dismissed and there would be no order for costs.

Mr. Hollans for the Society.

Mr. Poulles represented Mr. Panton.

C. W. A.

Motion refused.

CHANCERY DIVISION.—BEVAN v. WEBB. Before Mr. JUSTICE JOYCE: 9th March 1901.

Inspection of partnership books.

The Defendant was the managing partner of a brewery business in Monmouthshire. The Plaintiff was his partner. Art. 16 of the partnership, dated 4th July 1893, provided that partnership books of account, etc., shall be kept by the managing partner in which all transactions relating to the partnership shall be duly entered, and those books and all letters and other writings shall be kept at the counting house, to which each of the partners should have free access with liberty to examine and make extracts.

The Plaintiff having entertained proposals for the disposal of his interest in the concern, desired to have a report on the value thereof made by a professional valuer, by an examination of the said books and writings. Defendants objected to this, conceding the right of the partners only or of the partnership auditors acting for that purpose.

The learned Judge held that no such right as was contended for by the Plaintiff existed under the general law and by the articles the right of inspection was limited to free access and examination by the partners. No doubt where litigation was pending a greater right of inspection existed, and Brown v. Perkins (2 Hare 540) referred to inspection under that circumstance. If he were to accede to Plaintiff's request, where was the limitation that should be placed to such a right, why should not a solicitor or other delegate be sent to inspect partnership books. Plaintiff's motion therefore asking that by injunction Defendant be restrained from interfering with the inspection by Plaintiff's accountant was refused with costs.

Mr. Younger, K. C., and Mr. Chubb for the Plaintiff.

Mr. Hughes, K. C., and Mr. Cave opposing.

Decision in favour of Defendant.

COURT OF APPEAL (LORDS JUSTICES COLLINS and STERLING) 26th April 1901.—In the above case reversed the decision of Mr. Justice Joyce. The Court said that cl. 16 of the articles of partnership was in substance equivalent to sec. 24, subsec. 9 of the Partnership Act of 1890. What was the object with which the right of inspection was given to a partner? It was to enable a partner to ascertain the condition of the business. The general rule was whatever a person sui juris could do personally he could do by an agent. There was nothing in the nature of this case to narrow down that right. Suppose a partner to have become quite infirm or become otherwise incapacitated from availing himself of his right to examine the books of the partnership (which were as much his own as that of the other partners) he would not be on equal terms with his co-partners if he could not avail himself of the help of an agent to examine the books for him. No objection was taken to the particular individual nominated to make the examination. Nothing was shown to denote that the examination was desired for what was not a proper purpose or otherwise shown that the examination by the individual named would be to the detriment of the other partners.

Mr. Justice Joyce's decision was erroneous. The case of Dadswell v. Jacobs (34 Ch. D. 278) favoured the contention of the Plaintiff-Appellant. See also Brown v. Perkins (2 Hare 541).

C. W. A.

Appeal allowed.

CHANCERY DIVISION.—HERDMAN v. FEWSTER. Before Mr. JUSTICE JOYCE. 19th January 1901.

Debtors Act, 1869, sec. 4, third exception—Writ of attachment against person of Defendants for contempt—Trustees ordered to pay money into Court—Non-compliance—Constructive receipt of money.

The Defendants in this case were two brothers in humble circumstances in life, they were executors and trustees under their father's Will, and the Plaintiff Herdman was their sister. Plaintiff had complained that her portion under the father's Will had not been paid by Defendants. The Master's certificate on such claim had found £479 due from Defendants to Plaintiff, and he had directed by order of 26th October 1900 that Defendants should pay that sum into Court. Such order was not complied with, hence this application for leave to issue writs of attachment against Defendants.

The learned Judge refused to grant the permission; in committing people to prison the Court should very carefully consider its discretionary power. If this was a proper case for attachment, it must be brought within the third exception of the 4th section of the Debtors Act, 1869. The learned Judge was not satisfied that it fell within that section because "possession" in it meant "actual possession;" constructive possession of the funds or money will not do, such as the receipt of the money for the trustee by an agent or a solicitor; such evidence as had been produced did not satisfy the learned Judge that either of the Defendants actually received the money. Even if the Court had been satisfied of the actual receipt, it would still have to consider whether this was a fit and proper case for the exercise of the discretion vested in the Court under the Debtors Act, 1869.

Mr. Chubb for the Plaintiff.

Mr. Dare for one of the two brother Defendants.

CALCUTTA HIGH COURT.

[ORDINARY ORIGINAL CIVIL JURISDICTION.]

SUIT No. 4 OF 1901.

STANLEY, J.
1901.

J. BOISAGOMOFF

v.

14, June.

THE NAHAPIET JUTE COMPANY, LIMITED.

Evidence Act, sec. 33—Civil Procedure Code, sec. 389—Evidence taken on commission without full opportunity for effectual cross-examination, if admissible—Evidence taken on commission though not read over and signed by witness, if admissible.

In this case Mr. Knight (with him Mr. Sinha) for the Plaintiff tendered the evidence taken on commission of Mr. Batchelor, a witness for 'the Plaintiff, who had left for England before trial.

Mr. Garth (with him Mr. J. G. Woodroffe) for the Defendant Company objected to the admission of the commission on the ground that he as the Defendants' counsel had not had an opportunity of cross-examination. The Defendants were willing to have attended on the Saturday preceding the Monday on which the witness was examined but the witness would or could not attend. On Monday the commission was held from 5 to 7 o'clock at which time the cross-examination was not concluded. The witness said he could give half-an-hour more, but could not attend on the following day Tuesday, nor on Wednesday on which day he was going to England, but he (Mr. Garth) had stated that he could not finish in half-an-hour. The meeting then broke up, and the commission was returned without the witness having been fully cross-examined.—Evidence Act, sec. 33; Civil Procedure Code, sec. 389.

Mr. Knight in reply.—"Duly executed" in sec. 389 of the Code refers to the duties of the commissioner. There is no difficulty so far as the Code is concerned. Though the evidence was not read over and signed, that is not necessary. Barker v. Chapman cited in Hume Williams on Evidence by Commission 129. It was the duty of the Defendants to have sat on. The proper length of time for a commission is four hours though by custom two hours is considered as sufficient. In a case of this kind full time should have been given.

Mr. Garth.—The witness himself said that he could not sit for more than half-an-hour.

Mr. Knight.—It is not sufficient that counsel says he cannot finish cross-examination within a particular time.

THE COURT.—As to this such case must depend on its own circumstances. Do you suggest that counsel was merely obstructive?

Mr. Knight.—No.

THE COURT.—Then I must accept counsel's statement that he could not finish within half-an-hour.

Mr. Knight.—He should have gone on and the commissioner should have compelled the witness to sit out the full time of the commission.

THE COURT.—I have heard counsel at considerable length upon the question whether the evidence taken upon commission of a witness for the Plaintiff, Mr. Batchelor, is admissible or not. Mr. Batchelor appeared before the commissioner for examination at 5 o'clock on Monday, 15th April. He was examined-in-chief, and cross-examination commenced and was proceeding at 7 o'clock which appears to be the usual time for a commission to rise. Witness said that he could not attend on next day and was going abroad the day following. He said he was willing to remain half-an-hour. Mr. Garth said he could not finish in half-an-hour thereupon the commissioner rose. There is no allegation that cross-examination could have been finished in half-an-hour or any want of reason or bona fides in statement of counsel. The deposition was not read and signed in the usual course but I am not disposed to think that this alone would prevent the reception of the evidence. There is nothing in the Code requiring this, and in England where there is such requirement it has been held to be directory only and failure to give effect to it does not invalidate the commission. The other objection is one of substance. Sec. 33 of the Evidence Act which empowers the Court to read evidence taken on commission provides that the adverse party in the first proceeding must have had the right and opportunity to cross-examine. It appears to me that this provision means an effectual cross-examination complete and not partial. If that was not so, witness might, after a few preliminary questions, decline to appear upon a subsequent date. There is no suggestion but that the desire of counsel to cross examine was bona fide, and under these circumstances I am satisfied that the evidence tendered should not be admitted. I am bound to add that the question raised is one of some difficulty, and so far as counsel can discover there is no case dealing with the exact question which is before me.

[ORDINARY ORIGINAL CIVIL JURISDICTION.]

SALE, J. 1901. 17, June.	}	In the matter of the GUARDIANS AND WARDS ACT
		and
		In the matter of PRAKASH CHUNDEB
		MITTER, an infant.

Guardians and Wards Act (VIII of 1890), secs. 7 and 17—Appointment of guardian of a minor as adopted son of another—Adoption challenged—Title to property claimed on behalf of infant, suit pending as to.

This was an application under the Guardians and Wards Act for the appointment of a guardian of the property and person of the abovenamed infant under the following circumstances:—It was alleged that on the 17th February 1901 the infant was duly adopted by one Sreemutty Kherode Mohiney Dassee, widow of Suresh Chunder Mitter, as the adopted son of her deceased husband. Kherode Mohiney died on the day following the adoption. Suresh Chunder Mitter left considerable property in Calcutta and elsewhere, and a suit had been instituted by Kherode Mohiney against her husband's mother, Prosonnomoye, to have it declared that two of the properties alleged to have been left by her husband belonged to his estate, the defence in that suit being that the properties did not belong to the estate of Suresh Chunder, but formed the stridhan of the Defendant. That suit was pending at the time of this application. Notice of this application was given to Prosonnomoye as one of the near relatives of the infant. She appeared and objected to the appointment of a guardian on the ground that the adoption was not valid in law, and that there was no adoption in fact.

Mr. Sinha and Mr. B. C. Mitter for the Applicant.

Mr. Garth and Mr. Chakravarti for Prosonnomoye.

Mr. B. C. Mitter in opening the case submitted that Prosonnomoye cannot have any locus standi, if she does not admit Prokash Chunder Mitter to be an adopted son and that the question of validity of the adoption cannot be discussed in this application. He cited Nankar Singh v Prandhone Singh (12 W. R. 356).

Mr. Chakravarti submitted that the proper course for the infant was to institute a suit for the declaration of the validity of the adoption. Instead of that the parties have chosen this by-way to gain their object. He submitted that when the question of right to some properties belonging to late Suresh Chunder is in dispute the proper thing that the Court ought to do is to appoint a Receiver to the properties and appoint a guardian of the person of the infant. He cited Sham Kuar v. Mohanundo Sahoy (I. L. R. 19 Cal. 301) and In the matter of Bittan, an infant (I. L. R. 2 Cal. 357).

Mr. Sinha in reply said that Prosonnomoye received notice simply because of her relationship to me on the ground of adoption and if she denies the validity or the fact of adoption, out must she go of this application. Besides there are other properties than the property in dispute and that if the adoption is to be questioned it must be done in a separate suit. Further there is a suit pending between Prosonnomoye and the representative of Suresh's estate which suit requires looking after and submitted that guardian should be appointed as prayed for.

Held—That under secs. 7 and 17 of the Guardians and Wards Act the only matter to be considered by the Court in appointing a guardian is the welfare of the infant.

That an application for the appointment of a guardian is analogous to an application for letters of administration, and the question of title to the property claimed by the infant and the question of adoption cannot be gone into in such an application.

That the circumstances that the adoption is challenged and that a suit at present exists in which the title to certain properties claimed on behalf of the infant is raised, are such as would prima facie suggest that the interests of the infant require protection and a guardian should be appointed, taking care at the same time not to prejudice any question of title which may have been or may hereafter be raised as to the status of the infant.

That it having been brought to the Court's notice that the validity of the adoption is questioned, precaution should be taken to safeguard any property the guardian may get possession of.

Ordered—That the applicant be appointed guardian, and that he do give a bond with two sureties to the satisfaction of the Registrar for the proper management of any estate that may come into his hands as such guardian limited to the moveable properties and the rents and issues of the immoveable properties of such estate and that he do render accounts every six months to this Court.

Mr. N. C. Bose, Attorney for the Applicant.

Messrs. Kallynath Mitter and Sarbadhicary, Attorneys for the Objector.

Application granted.

[CIVIL REVISIONAL JURISDICTION.]

RULE No. 679 OF 1901.

AMBER ALI, J.	{	SARUP GANJAN SINGH BHUYAN,
PRATT, J.		Judgment-debtor, Petitioner,
1901.		v.
18, June.	{	ROBERT WATSON & Co., LD., Decree-holders, Opposite Party.

Limitation—Continuation of previous application—Fresh start—Landlord and Tenant Procedure Act (X of 1859), sec. 92—Decree for rent—Suit, whether interrupts or keeps execution in abeyance—Limitation—Execution of rent decree below Rs. 500.

This was a rule issued on the 11th of March 1901 by Ghose and Stevens, JJ., against the order of Babu Ram Nirranjan Pershad, Deputy Collector of Bara Bazar, in the District of Manbhum, dated the 29th of December 1900, and the execution proceedings in miscellaneous case No. 148 of 1900-1901.

The facts of the case material to this report were as follows:—

Messrs. Robert Watson & Co. obtained, on the 12th January 1892, a decree for arrears of rent against the Petitioner, Sarup Ganjan Singh Bhuyan, under Act X of 1859, for 14½ annas and costs and applied for execution on the 10th March 1892. That application was dismissed on the ground of informality on the 30th June 1892, and no further application for execution was made until the 18th May 1900. Meantime on the 19th April 1892 the judgment-debtor had instituted a suit to set aside a certain document on which the aforesaid rent-decree was based, and on the 9th August 1892 the plaint was amended so as to include a prayer to set aside the rent-decree itself. On the 1st July 1893 a temporary injunction was issued restraining the decree-holders from executing their decree pending the decision of the said suit.

On the 28th February 1894 that suit was decreed in the Plaintiff's favour, and the temporary injunction was converted into a permanent one. On appeal that decree was set aside, and the injunction was discharged on the 20th May 1897. The decree-holder thereupon on the 18th May 1900 applied for execution of the decree. Objection was taken by the judgment-debtor that the application was barred and could not issue under the provisions of sec. 92 of Act X of 1859.

The Deputy Collector held that the execution proceedings were not barred by limitation and observed as follows:—

"It appears from copies of papers filed on behalf of the judgment-creditor that an injunction as stated was issued, while from the judgment of the Sub-Judge referred to above it is clear that the judgment-creditor was prevented from executing the decree. As mentioned above this decree was set aside by the Judicial Commissioner on the 20th May 1897, and so it was on this date that the judgment-creditor's rights and title to the execution of the decree were revived. Various rulings have been cited on both sides, but considering all of them and the facts of the case I think the period of three years' limitation should run from the 20th May 1897; and as the present execution proceedings were instituted on the 18th of May 1900, the decree is not barred by limitation, and I accordingly direct the execution proceedings to be proceeded with."

Against this order the Petitioner moved the High Court and obtained the present rule to shew cause why that order and the execution proceedings should not be set aside.

Held—That the application of the 18th May 1900 could not be regarded as a continuation of the proceedings initiated by the decree-holders on the 10th March, or as merely a step taken in furtherance of the execution for which they had formerly applied.

That the suit brought by the judgment-debtor did not interrupt and keep in abeyance any pending execution proceedings.

That there is no authority for the proposition that the decree-holders are entitled to a fresh starting point from the 20th May 1897, and may execute their decree at any time within three years of that date.

RULE No. 1035 of 1901.

MACLEAN, C. J.	}	BINODINI DEVI, Plaintiff,
BANERJEE, J.		Petitioner,
1901.		"
17, June.		KALA CHAND CHACRAYARTI, Defendant, Opposite Party.

• Examination by commission—Purdanashin lady—Allegation of immorality—Order rejecting application for examination by commission—Interlocutory order—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), sec. 383, 640—Charter Act (24 and 25 Vict., C. 104), sec. 15—Jurisdiction, power of superintendence of High Courts.

• This was a Rule issued on the opposite party, to show cause why the order of Babu Bidhu Bhusan Banerjee, 3rd Munsif of Howrah, dated the 12th March 1901, rejecting the Petitioner's application for her examination should not be set aside.

The Petitioner had applied for her own examination on commission. The application was supported by an affidavit to the effect that the Petitioner was a purdanashin Brahmin lady. The application was made in the course of the hearing of a money suit which was brought by the Petitioner against her father, the opposite party, and was opposed by the latter, who filed a counter-affidavit alleging that his daughter, the Petitioner, was a woman of immoral character, carrying on prostitution in his own house with the help of her sister. The Munsif made the following order rejecting the application: "Plaintiff's application this day for her own examination on commission is rejected on the ground stated in the counter-affidavit filed by the Defendant, her father."

The Petitioner then moved the High Court and obtained the present Rule.

In support of the Rule, it was contended that as it was not alleged in the counter-affidavit that the Petitioner was not a purdanashin lady, the mere allegation of immorality against her did not justify the Munsif's order and that the High Court could interfere with the order of the Munsif under sec. 15 of 24 and 25 Vict., C. 104.

THE COURT:—The Rule is made absolute, and the Munsif is directed to constitute himself commissioner for the examination of the Petitioner. Costs to abide the result of the suit.

Babu Mahendra Nath Roy for the Petitioner.
Babu Poorna Chandra Shome for the Opposite Party.

High Court Notice.

Notice is hereby given that the next examination of candidates for admission as Attorneys will commence on Monday, the 5th of August 1901.

HIGH COURT, ORIGINAL SIDE: } W. R. FINK,
The 28th June, 1901. } Registrar.

IT IS MR. JUSTICE BRETT AND NOT MR. JUSTICE Pratt, as stated in our last issue, who presides at the present Calcutta Criminal Sessions. There are only six cases in the list. Four of these are petty ones in which the accused have been committed because they are old offenders. Of the remaining two one is a case of fraud on a bank and the other an attempt at murder. The low record of crime reflects credit on the capital of the Empire.

IN VIEW OF THE RECENT RUN ON THE LIST ON THE Original Side, and the number of cases struck off in consequence, we have been asked to suggest whether it would not be practicable in future to appoint some Saturday for the revision of the Romanet cause list in Chambers. On such days, attorneys who may not be ready with their cases for any sufficient reason, may apply for postponement or for the placing of cases not yet ripe for hearing lower down in the list. This, it is said, will cause less interruption in the regular business of the Court, and will also save parties costs resulting from cases being struck off and then getting them restored. It is also expected that this will offer greater opportunities to the attorneys to be ready with their cases and do away with the usual excuses for not being prepared to go on.

MONSIEUR LABORI, THE DISTINGUISHED FRENCH advocate, who has won the admiration of the world by his fearless advocacy on behalf of the defence in the State trials of Zola and Dreyfus, was the honoured guest of the Hardwicke Society at its last annual dinner. The flower of the English Bench and the Bar attended to honour him, as by honouring him, they deemed, they were only honouring the noble traditions of a profession whose high privilege it has always been to defend an accused however humble, no matter how grave may be the charge and how mighty the accuser. The homage done to the guest was not so much for the causes he so ably pleaded as it was for his fearless vindication of the right of defence against a powerful executive, quite regardless of the prevalent public feeling and undaunted even by the hands of an assassin. M. Labori, addressing his hosts, spoke of this right of defence and of the Bar, who are the custodians of it, in the following terms:—

The right of defence was a natural right; they showed at the same time that it was the common aim of all barristers to protect this right, which from the most ancient times had been committed as a sacred deposit to the Bars of all civilised nations. The Bar, in fact, was indispensable to secure to the advocate the liberty and the power to accomplish his professional duties. There were circumstances, he knew, where nothing else was required to assist a barrister in his sometimes arduous task than a mighty institution, a strong association of men who respected and feared for their knowledge, honour, and influence, were at the same time so thoroughly united by their professional ideal that they were in some way compelled to bring their fellow-members, in spite of their own counsel, opinions, or passions, to the support of their common authority. It had been rightly said that without independence there was no Bar. It was no less true to add that without a Bar there was no independence for the nation, and where would this be better understood or more highly proclaimed than in such an assembly of men as were there that evening, many of whom had conferred or would confer lustre upon Parliament, the Bench, and the Bar, in a country where liberty from olden times had been at the base of every political institution where judicial power stood so high that in all parts of the world it was looked up to as a model of authority, independence, and justice, where the Bar enjoyed so much credit and consideration that it was deemed worthy of producing the most eminent members of the Bench.

THE BAR IN ENGLAND BEING ALWAYS THE STEPPING stone to the Bench, the judges have great regard and respect for the profession to which they once belonged. It is no wonder therefore that the independence of the Bar is to them a matter of no less concern than is the independence of the Bench. The Lord Chancellor, in replying to the toast to the Bench, rightly said, that without the independence of the Bar and the independence of the Bench the cause of justice was never secure. We commend his words to the profession and urge on those who have the privilege to belong to it, to make "courage, learning, independence and honour" their watch-words in life.

It might be that each nation had its own processes and forms of the administration of justice. We were not their judges. We had nothing to do with their modes of administering justice. But we did recognise this, that the same qualities in all countries and in all times, courage, independence, and honor, were to be always held in esteem by mankind. Speaking as a judge and returning thanks for the Bench, he might say that the function of a judge was not to speak but to listen. Whether that function was universally observed was one of those questions which he declined to discuss. All he could say was that it would be well if the judge would appreciate what an invaluable assistance it was to his own mind to listen to those who had prepared their arguments and were perfectly familiar with the facts. He had been reminded by the proposer of the toast that the independence of the judges was one of those things which was not of yesterday. If his historical memory was right, the independence of the judges dated from the time of William III., but undoubtedly the independence of the judges and the independence of the Bar was the great security for the administration of justice. It was idle to expect that, whether it were in respect of a popular or of an unpopular cause, you should restrict an advocate from doing what is unpopular, and only allow him to say that which is pleasing to the multitude. If such a system were to prevail among mankind the administration of justice would be in grave peril. It was one of the glories of the English Bench, one of the glories of any Bench that had respect for itself, that, however unpopular and whatever might be the circumstances which surrounded a particular case, the man who was intrusted with the interests of another should forget all that referred to himself, and only remember that he represented another. He could not forbear to say that these were topics which tempted even a judge, who was bound to listen, to go further than he would, and he would say no more than this, that he thanked them on behalf of his brother judges, and he was quite sure that they, with him, would only too gladly recognise the fact that what they owed to an independent and learned and honorable Bar was incapable of adequate expression.

Review.

THE LAW OF LEGAL PRACTITIONERS, including the Legal Practitioners Act (XVIII of 1879, as amended by IX of 1884 and XI of 1896), with Notes of Rulings and Rules of the several High Courts. By Siva Prasad (B. A., B. L.), Pleader, Judge's Court, Bankipore, 1901. Price Rs. 3.

The work before us does not aspire to be an exhaustive treatise on the subject yet it gives us much useful information as to the functions, powers, and duties of the Legal Practitioners in Courts and in relation to their clients and agents. It also contains some informations of a practical nature such as rules for examination, qualifications and certificates of Vakils, Pleaders, Attorneys and Mukhtears. The book is divided into two parts, the first embracing the case law on the subject of Legal Practitioners generally, including Advocates, Vakils, Attorneys, Pleaders and Mukhtears, Revenue Agents, etc., and the second dealing with the Legal Practitioners Act and the reported decisions of our Courts thereon. Each of these parts contain considerable information which should prove useful to legal practitioners. The author's attempt to furnish members of the profession with useful hints and suggestions on matters of practical utility is also very laudable. The paper, printing and the general get up of the book are, however, far from prepossessing.

COURT OF APPEAL.—In re J. TOMKINS AND SONS. Before LORD JUSTICE RIGBY, LORD JUSTICE VAUGHAN WILLIAMS and LORD JUSTICE STIRLING. 18th January 1901.

Bankruptcy Act, 1883, sec. 148—"An officer of the company, interpretation of."

In September 1900 a firm, called Eastwood, Limited, presented a bankruptcy petition against the above-named J. Tomkins and Sons in respect of a judgment debt of £76. The applicants had alleged that executions had been levied and thereunder the debtor's goods had been sold by the sheriff in July previously. That application was signed for the applicant company by "H. J. Byrne duly authorized under the seal of the company." The said Byrne was a clerk engaged in the company's secretariat work. By a resolution of the Board of the company some years previously Byrne was authorized to take all necessary steps in bankruptcy against debtors of the company. This authority was given under the seal of the company. The debtors raised the question that Byrne was not an officer of the company within the meaning of the above section, and urged that the bankruptcy petition was bad in consequence. Mr. Registrar, Linklater, agreed with the debtor's view that Byrne was not such an officer, but he ordered that the petition should be amended by the creditors authorizing a proper officer to act on their behalf.

The debtors appealed objecting to the amendment. The Court of Appeal held that any person bona fide chosen by the company to be their agent for the presentation of a bankruptcy petition became thereby an officer of the company for that purpose within the meaning of the Act. The appointment of Byrne was consequently good and the petition good. The creditors were wrong in insisting on the amendment, therefore the appeal would be allowed but without costs. The matter would come before the Registrar on the original petition in the ordinary course and proceeded with as on a good petition.

COURT OF APPEAL.—In re LAKE, A SOLICITOR, DYER TRUSTS. Before LORD JUSTICES RIGBY, VAUGHAN WILLIAMS and STIRLING. 22nd February 1901.

Bankruptcy Act, 1883, sec. 48—Preference by bankrupt—Dominant motive.

This matter came up on appeal in the bankruptcy of Benjamin G. Lake of the firm of Lake and Lake, solicitors. The appeal was from a decision of Mr. Justice Wright. In January of last year a sum of £1,250 was received by the said bankrupt or his firm and had been misappropriated. Benjamin G. Lake was a trustee of a marriage settlement and his firm acted as solicitors thereto. Three months later the bankrupt deposited, with the trust securities with his firm for safe custody, £2,000 Didcot Newbury Railway Debenture stock accompanied by a memorandum. The question arose principally on the terms of this memorandum whether the bankrupt acted with a view to prefer the cestui que trust from a motive of gratitude; Mr. Justice Wright had held that that was the reason, and not mainly from a sense of the obligation to repair the breach of trust.

The COURT OF APPEAL allowed the appeal of the trustees of the settlement, on the ground that the trustee in bankruptcy should affirmatively make out that the dominant motive of the bankrupt was the desire to prefer the favoured creditor over those less favoured by him. It was admitted here that he was moved by mixed motives.

COURT OF APPEAL.—INMAN v. ACKROYD AND BEST, LIMITED.—Before the MASTER OF THE ROLLS, LORD JUSTICES COLLINS and ROMER. 23rd February 1901.

Company—Director's remuneration—Apportionment.

The facts are stated in C. W. N., Vol. IV, p. xcii.

The claim which was resisted by the company was one by the Plaintiff, a late director of the Defendant company, for remuneration at £125 a year from 1st November 1898 to 30th May 1899 amounting to £72-1-4. The question was whether the director under the 81st article of Association was entitled to remuneration for a period less than a year.

The COURT OF APPEAL upheld Mr. Justice Bruce's decision that he was not entitled to it and referred to the two decisions: Salton v. New Beeston Cycle Co. (1899, 1 Ch. 775) and In re Central De Kaap Mines (W. N. 1899, p. 216) as supporting that view. The case of Sydney v. Port Darwin Gold Mine (1 Megonke 385) was based on a different state of facts.

Appeal dismissed with costs.

CHANCERY DIVISION.—FLADGATE v. THE VINTNERS COMPANY. Before MR. JUSTICE COZENS HARDY. 26th January 1901.

Construction of a Will—Gift—Conditions imposed.

The Will which was to be construed and its effect declared was that of a Mr. Cassiot. By it he bequeathed to the above company the portrait of his late friend and partner one Martiney "to be hung up by them in a conspicuous part of their Common Hall and always so to remain," and on the understanding that that condition was accepted; there was this further bequest, "the sum of £4,000 to be paid from such part of my personal estate as may by law be bequeathed for charitable purposes, enjoining the said company out of the income of the said £4,000 to keep in due and proper repair the said portrait, the surplus to be applied by the master and wardens of the said company for the benefit of individuals who have been engaged in the wine trade; and if applied by way of annuity, no single annuity to exceed £50 per annum to be held only during the pleasure of the master and wardens for the time being of the Vintners Company."

The learned Judge held that the bequest of the picture was a good bequest, the condition being not a precedent but a subsequent condition. The other gift was not valid, there was no reference to age in the description of the recipients of the bounty, nor to their poverty. The wording did not disclose any indication of a charitable gift, the intention did not appear sufficiently so as to support the gift as a charitable one. This gift therefore failed. The cost of this matter which was heard on an originating summons was to come out of the estate.

Mr. Eve, K. C., and Mr. Cartnell for the Plaintiff.

Mr. A. James for the residuary legatees.

KING'S BENCH DIVISION.—LEVY v. SCOTTISH EMPLOYERS INSURANCE, LIMITED. Before MR. JUSTICE WILLS and MR. JUSTICE KENNEDY. 30th January 1901.

Insurance—Contract—Authority of agent—Misstatements in application form.

In the proposal form the Plaintiff, Levy, had stated his height to be 5ft. 8in. and weight 14st. 7lb. Both those were incorrect, the Plaintiff being a shorter and a much heavier man. In the form filled up by Plaintiff there was a printed notice that the company would not hold to be binding on them, verbal statements made to the agent and until a policy was made out, the Insurance was not complete. The Plaintiff's case rested on what one Hast, Defendant's agent, said at the time he gave to Plaintiff receipt for the £5 paid as premium "you will be insured right away if you do not hear within 14 days' trial the matter as completed." The allusion to the 14 days was made owing to the premium receipt stating that it covered that time, but it was stated thereon to be given, "subject to the conditions of the policy." The Plaintiff was totally disabled by a railway accident which was covered by the policy, but the Defendant company had immediately on receipt of Plaintiff's application declined it, before the accident happened, though Plaintiff had not heard of the refusal of his proposal before the accident. The Recorder on the findings of the jury that Plaintiff was not aware that his height and weight were not correctly stated in his application form, and that Hast did say to him as above set out, found for Plaintiff.

The Divisional Court, as above constituted on the company's appeal, set aside that finding being of opinion that at the date of the claim there was no contract of insurance. Hast had no authority from the company to insure the Plaintiff, nor did that agent contract to insure the Plaintiff; moreover if there was evidence of a contract by the agent, it was of no effect because it contradicted the terms of a written document. The agent was treated by the Plaintiff as having authority to make an entirely different contract to that contained in the proposal. The agent had no such authority. The misstatements in the proposal were material and fatal. The finding of the jury that Plaintiff did not know that his height and weight were incorrectly stated was preposterous, and could only be attributed to the Plaintiff being a poor man and the company a wealthy concern. The case of Bawden v. London and Edinburgh Insurance Corporation (1892, 2 Q. B. 531) was distinguished. The appeal was allowed.

Mr. Dalby for the company appealing.

BANKRUPTCY COURT.—In re AHMED ex parte THE OFFICIAL RECEIVER. Before Mr. JUSTICE WRIGHT. 7th May 1901.

Gray's Inn—Deposit by student—Right of trustee in bankruptcy.

A concise statement of proceedings taken in the bankruptcy of Mr. Sirajuddin Ahmed, a law student at Gray's Inn, will be found at p. cxv, Vol. V, of the C. W. N. Mr. Ahmed in January 1899 when he joined that Inn of Court had, as is usual, deposited £50. The Official Receiver as the trustee in bankruptcy now claimed to be entitled to that sum and sought an order directing the Society of Gray's Inn to make it over to him less any fees or sums then actually due and payable to the society by the bankrupt.

The claim was resisted on behalf of the society under their rules which regulates the admission of students for call to the Bar. It was urged that the society had a right to retain that deposit against all sums which may fall due from Mr. Ahmed. The learned Judge was clearly of opinion that the society was entitled to retain the £50, which was a cautionary fund, so long as there was any possibility of Mr. Ahmed's liability to them having regard to the rules of the society. The claim of the Official Receiver was therefore rejected.

Construction of document—Agreement to pay on behalf of father—Death of father.

The Respondents are merchants carrying on business at Bombay as "Glade & Co." The Appellant in the year 1894 was carrying on business in partnership with his father Nensey Peroo, his grandfather Peroo Mahomed, and his uncle Fazal Peroo and Kassam Peroo under the name and style of "Peroo Mahomed" and "Nensey Peroo" under the terms of an indenture dated 21st December, 1885.

The Appellant had an 1/4th share in the business and under the terms of that indenture the partnership was to continue during the time of the grandfather.

In the year 1891 owing to disputes between the partners it was proposed that the partnership should be dissolved. The said firm owing to its business transactions with Glade & Co., the Respondents, George K. Heinrichs of that firm was asked to act as peace-maker, with the result that the Respondents terminated in an agreement for dissolution, this was drawn up dated 30th July 1894 and executed by all the partners excepting the Appellant. In consequence of such refusal, several conversations took place between the said Heinrichs and the Appellant and it was only upon receipt of the following letter that the Appellant signed the said dissolution agreement.

The letter was drawn up by Appellant's attorneys Messrs. Gilbert Payne and Sayani and was signed Glade & Co. The letter was addressed to Appellant.

"In consideration of your having at our request signed the agreement of dissolution of partnership made between Mr. Peroo Mahomed and Messrs. Nenssey Peroo, Cassam Peroo, Fazal Peroo and yourself, we hereby agree to pay you on behalf of Nenssey Peroo a sum of Rs. 500 per month payable on the first of each month until such time as your father Mr. Nenssey Peroo makes provision for your maintenance, so as to give thereby himself the above sum every month for such maintenance."

The Respondents duly paid the said sum of Rs. 500 until the death of Nenssey Peroo which took place on 29th March 1898. The Respondent Heinrichs failed to persuade the father Nenssey Peroo to provide for Appellant on the Respondents refusing to pay any sum accrued since the said father's death. The Appellant commenced the present suit in the Bombay High Court in its original jurisdiction to recover the arrears with interest over Rs. 4,000. Mr. Justice Tyabji allowed the claim but on the Defendant's appeal that decision was reversed by the Chief Justice Jenkins and Mr. Justice Candy.

The Plaintiff then brought this appeal to His Majesty in Council. The sole question was the right construction to be placed on above set out letter which constituted the agreement.

Mr. Lawson Walton, K. C., and Mr. Mayne for the Appellant contended that the High Court should have decided that by the said agreement, the Defendants bound themselves to pay the said sum until the father made a provision for the Appellant's maintenance. The father's death without making such provision did not put an end to that agreement. Plaintiff was entitled to the equivalent for an asset which was of a permanent kind. He was relinquishing a right in a partnership business.

LORD MACNAGHTEN.—You will observe that payments were to be made on behalf of his father.

SIR R. COUCH.—The father was not bound to provide for the son's maintenance after his death.

Mr. Walton.—The Plaintiff's interest in the partnership was not dependent on his father, it was such an interest he was bartering away. The father's death rendered the agreement absolute by making the defence impossible.

Mr. Haldane, K. C., Mr. Jardine, K. C., and Mr. [unclear] for the Respondents were not called on.

APPEAL FROM OUDH.

LORD HOBHOUSE.	RAJA MAHOMED MAMTAZ ALI,
LORD MACNAGHTEN.	Plaintiff, Appellant,
LORD ROBERTSON.	v.
SIR RICHARD COUCH.	FARHAT ALI KHAN and
SIR FORD NORTH.	SAKHAWAT ALI KHAN,
1901.	Defendants, Respondents.
1, May.

Court of Wards, powers of to deal with Ward's property—Maintenance—Assignment of villages in lieu of cash maintenance.

These were consolidated appeals from a judgment of the Judicial Commissioners of Oudh, dated 19th May 1898, reversing decree of Civil Judge of Lucknow.

The suits raised the question of the title of the Respondents to the villages of Kasmora and Pura Mirza. The facts are these:—Rajah Riasat Ali was talukdar of Atranla in Oudh. He died in 1865 leaving him surviving a widow Dan Bibi. The Appellant is the posthumous son by that lady and was born in October 1865. On the Raja's death Dan Bibi got possession, but on 23rd August 1865 her title was challenged in a suit for possession of the estate instituted by one Mussammat Madaro as guardian of her sons, the Respondents, claiming title for them as the legitimate sons of the deceased Raja. She herself was a prostitute, but she alleged the Raja had married her. During the course of the litigation a reference was made on the 27th October 1865 to arbitrators to decide the following issue, viz.:—"Whether the son, born of Dan Bibi, can be the sole heir to the entire property left under the custom of the country, or Farhat Ali Khan and Sakhawat Ali Khan, the two sons born of Madaro Bibi, can also be successors to the property? If they can, what is the portion to which they and Madaro Bibi would be entitled to?"

An award was made bearing date the 18th November 1865; and the arbitrators decided against the claims of Madaro Bibi and her sons to any "share in the inheritance." They then decide that Madaro Bibi was entitled to articles given her by the deceased Raja, and to recommend maintenance for Madaro Bibi and her sons in the following terms:—"It is proper that Bibi Madaro should receive Rs. 60 per month in cash for maintenance and support during her life, on the proviso of keeping herself in the house with honour and good conduct. That the monthly stipend just proposed for the maintenance and support of children should continue for six years, after which time when the children become capable of receiving education in a Government School, the Government would then propose what they should get for their support."

"That when both these children are grown up and attain the age of discretion, they shall have villages separated for them, according to their stipend after deduction therefrom of the Government revenue."

"That the monthly stipend will be given as follows:—

Rs. 10 per month to Bibi Madaro.

Rs. 30 per month to Farhat Ali Khan.

Rs. 20 per month to Sakhawat Ali Khan."

Two of the arbitrators appeared on the 7th December 1865 before the Deputy Commissioner, in whose Court the case was pending, and he seems to have returned the award, for on the document is endorsed a further award made on the 17th December 1865, but signed by only two of the arbitrators. Up to the 21st December 1865 it had not been filed in Court, yet on that date the Deputy Commissioner proceeded to dispose of the case, and passed a decree in the following terms:—"I dismiss the claim for the estate, but decree maintenance to Plaintiff, and the two sons Farhat Ali and Sakhawat Ali, on the terms of the award, viz.:—Plaintiff, Rs. 10; Farhat Ali, Rs. 30; and Sakhawat Ali, Rs. 20, total Rs. 60."

This decree was confirmed on appeal by the Commissioner of Fyzabad, on the 11th August 1866; and also by the Judicial Commissioner on the 2nd January 1867.

Payments by way of maintenance were made to the Respondents, but not the exact amounts decreed; and in consequence, in the year 1883, they claimed from the Deputy Commissioner, the estate still being under the management of the Court of Wards, a sum of Rs. 3,271 as arrears due to them. On the 25th May 1883 the Deputy Commissioner asked for orders, and wrote as follows:—"Their claim appears to me to be perfectly correct; and with your sanction I propose to make the payments at an early date. I also propose in accordance with the decree of 1866 (19th March) to put an end to the cash allowances for the future, and assign to them a village apiece for their maintenance. I would choose for the older Farhat Ali, a village which would give him an allowance of Rs. 500 or Rs. 600 per annum, and for the younger Sakhawat Ali, a village producing Rs. 350 or Rs. 400."

The Chief Commissioner sanctioned the proposals, and stated in his order of the 7th July 1883 that the Respondents "be given, in lieu of the present monthly allowance, two villages, yielding a profit of Rs. 600 and Rs. 400 per annum respectively, after the payment of the Government jama."

On receipt of this order, the manager of the estate was required to report, and he, on the 19th August 1883, suggested the villages of Kasmora and Pura Mirza as suitable for the purpose. And on the same date the Deputy Commissioner directed the immediate delivery of possession to the Respondents, and the execution of "conveyance deeds," granting them a heritable interest.

No conveyances have ever been executed, but the Respondents were at once given possession of the villages in suit, and have continuously received the profits, which are in excess of the amount sanctioned by Government.

On coming of age, the Appellant being informed of the nature of the Respondents' possession, refused to recognise it; but was ready and willing to allow them a cash maintenance of Rs. 30 and Rs. 20 per month as decreed to them. On their refusal to surrender possession, he instituted the present suits to obtain possession of those villages.

The Judicial Commissioner found as follows:—

"The Defendants had certainly a claim to maintenance when the villages were made over to them, and it was for the benefit of the minor that such claims should be settled. Sec. 172, Act XVII of 1876, provided that the Court of Wards shall have power to give such leases or farms of the whole or parts of the immoveable property, under its charge, and to mortgage or sell any part of such property, and to do all such other acts as it may judge to be most for the benefit of the property and the advantage of the disqualified proprietors. If the Court of Wards, therefore, honestly thought it was for the advantage of the estate that the Defendants' claims should be settled by making over the villages to them, the Deputy Commissioner acted within his authority when he did so. Had there been no award or decree,—as the estate is one of considerable importance and the Defendants, as brothers of the talukdar, had a claim on him for maintenance,—I do not think it could be held that the grant of the villages to them, in lieu of their claims, was not proper, or that it was not for the advantage of the estate and its owner that a reasonable and suitable provision should be made for them in accordance with the custom of the family. Courts in fixing maintenance should have regard to the status in life of the ward and the amount of his income, (Trevelyan's Law relating to Minors, page 223), and the same considerations should guide the Court of Wards in settling claims to maintenance. There is nothing to indicate that the Deputy Commissioner, in making over the villages to the Defendants, had their interests in view, and not those of the Plaintiff. He did so presumably, because he thought the income of the villages was a proper amount to be given for the support of the Defendants, having regard to the rank and circumstances of the parties."

On this appeal Mr. Degruyther for Appellant submitted that the limits of Respondents' rights were to receive Rs. 30 and 20 respectively per month for life only. That the practical effect of the Deputy Commissioner's order was to make a gift of the Appellant's property to the Respondents to which they had no right. That the Court of the Judicial Commissioner had erroneously considered that they had a right to maintenance.

The questions were:—Can a guardian deal with property to the disadvantage of the ward and did the Court of Wards stand in a better position.

He submitted it did not, when such power is not given by statute.

He referred to Act XVII of 1876, secs. 161, 167, 170, and 172. He submitted that the Deputy Commissioner had not exercised a conscious judgment which he was bound to do, the minor's interest and the benefit of his property was never present to his mind. He had really given away the minor's property.

Further the Court of Wards was really the Chief Commissioner as the Deputy Commissioner was under his control and the order of the Deputy Commissioner was in violation or went beyond the sanction given by the Chief Commissioner.

THE COURT.—The Deputy Commissioner is the Court of Wards. He is under the control of the Commissioner but he is the Court of Wards.

The Respondents were not represented.

CALCUTTA HIGH COURT.

[CRIMINAL APPELLATE JURISDICTION.]

APPEAL NO. 278 OF 1901.

GHOSE, J.	}	NAZIM and three others,
TAYLOR, J.		Appellants,
1901.		v.
4, June.		THE KING-EMPEROR.

Confession—Retracted confession, if and how far admissible in evidence—Admissibility of such confession against person other than the maker thereof—Corroboration, 'amount' of, necessary—Previous convictions, how to be proved—Examination of accused to prove such previous conviction, if proper—Prejudice—Evidence Act (I of 1872), sec. 91—Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), secs. 310, 342, 511.

This was an appeal preferred by the Appellants from jail on the 14th of April 1901, against the order of B. B. Newbould, Esq., Sessions Judge of Sylhet, dated the 15th of March 1901, convicting the Appellants of offences under secs. 457 and 411 of the Penal Code.

The facts of the case, so far as they are material to this report, were as follows:—On the 23rd July 1900, the house of the complainant, Gopal Chandra Guha, was broken into under circumstances which amounted to an offence under sec. 457, I. P. Code, (house-breaking by night). Property was stolen and upon information from one Abdul Ali, the Appellants and two other persons were arrested. Some time after the occurrence Nazim and Yasin, two of the Appellants, made confessions, and the wife of Nazim gave evidence to the effect that Nazim and Arabdi and others went to commit theft and afterwards divided the spoil. There was also evidence that Tamiz gave up some buttons which were part of the stolen property. Nazim confessed on the 11th October 1900, and he repeated it on the 30th; and it was not withdrawn at the trial, and was put in evidence. In the second confession, Nazim exculpated Yasin, saying he did not go to commit the theft; and the evidence of his wife did not inculpate Yasin. It appears, however, that on the 11th October 1900, Yasin admitted before a Magistrate that he was one of the party of thieves and that he got Rs. 15 as his share, but that he had spent it. On the 30th October he alleged that he had made the statement in fear of his life, and this was apparently his first opportunity of retracting. No property was found in his possession and his confession was not full of details.

Nazim admitted in his examination before the Sessions Court that he was three times previously convicted, once in 1889, twice in 1890, and once by the Sessions Court in 1894, when he was sentenced to six years, all the convictions having been for theft or receiving stolen property, and there was a record of such admission on the Sessions record.

The accused were tried by the Sessions Judge of Sylhet with the aid of two assessors. One of the assessors was of opinion that Yasin and Tamiz were not guilty while the other found all the accused guilty of the offences charged. The Sessions Judge convicted all the accused of the offences under secs. 457 and 411, I. P. Code, and sentenced Nazim, in consequence of his previous convictions to ten years' rigorous imprisonment and the others to three years under sec. 457, I. P. Code, and passed no sentence under sec. 411, I. P. Code. Against this order the prisoners appealed from jail.

Held—A retracted confession should carry practically no weight as against a person other than the maker inasmuch as it is not made on oath, is not tested by cross-examination, and its truth is denied by the maker himself, who has thus lied in one or other of the occasions; and the very fullest corroboration would be necessary in such a case, far more than would be demanded for the sworn testimony of an accomplice on oath.

That a conviction cannot be had on an uncorroborated and retracted confession made by an accomplice.

That the accusation made in a confession of an accomplice may be considered against a co-accused if that statement is put in evidence against him, but its evidential value would be of the slightest.

That having regard to the provisions of sec. 91 of the Evidence Act and sec. 511 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, previous convictions should be proved by copies of judgment or extracts from judgments or by any other documentary evidence of the fact of such previous convictions.

That regard being had to the provision in sec. 342 of the Criminal Procedure Code, an examination of the accused in respect of those convictions is without legal warrant or justification.

Basanta Kumar Ghattak v. Queen-Empress (I. L. R. 26 Cal. 49) referred to.

A Sessions Judge is, however, justified under sec. 310, Cr. P. Code, in proceeding to pass sentence on the accused on an admission by him of previous convictions, and such sentence should not be interfered with unless such irregularity in the enquiry as to previous convictions has prejudiced the accused.

Yasin acquitted; sentence of Nazim confirmed, and those of other accused reduced.

No one appeared in this appeal.

Appeal allowed in part.

[CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION.]

APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE
No. 2373 of 1899.

MACLEAN, C. J. TAMASHA BIBI, Defendant,
BANERJEE, J. Appellant,
1901.
18, June. MATHURA NATH BHOWMICK and others, Plaintiffs, Respondents.

Ejectment, suit for—Notice to quit, service of Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), sec. 49—Rules of Government (Rule 3, Ch. I., Rules of Government of Bengal, 21st December 1885)—Strict adherence to rules, if necessary—Service of summons on Defendant, procedure for, if applicable—Personal service if sufficient—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), secs. 541, 487—High Court Rules, Ch. IX, Rule 2.

This was an appeal preferred on the 30th November 1899, against the decree of Babu Prasanna Kumar Ghose, Subordinate Judge of Nadia, dated the 7th August 1899, affirming that of Babu Upendra Chandra Chatterjee, Munsif of Kusthea, dated the 24th January 1899.

The facts of the case material to this report were as follows:—

The Plaintiffs were the landlords and the Defendants were their tenants. The suit, out of which this appeal arose, was an action in ejectment after notice to quit. The Plaintiffs alleged that the Defendants were korfa tenants, or under-riyats, having no right of occupancy in the holding, and that they had been served with notice of ejectment according to the provisions of sec. 49 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The notice in this case was addressed to the four Defendants and was served personally upon Defendant Tamasha Bibi.

The Defendants denied service of notice, and alleged that the notice was illegal, and that they were occupancy riyats and not liable to be ejected.

The Munsif found against the Defendants and decreed the Plaintiffs' suit for ejectment. On appeal by one of the Defendants, Tamasha Bibi, the present Appellant, the Subordinate Judge affirmed the decree of the first Court and upon the question as to service of notice observed as follows:—

As to the first question, it is to be observed, that it is admitted by both the parties to this appeal that the notice of ejectment that was issued on the Appellant was done under the provisions of sec. 49 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. But it is contended by the Appellant that that section having provided no mode of service of the notice, and the notice, the subject-matter of the suit, having been addressed to more persons than one, it should have been served according to the Government rules, provided in that behalf in para. 3, chapter 1st of Appendix I of the Rules framed by the Local Government under the Bengal Tenancy Act which prescribed that service in such a case shall be made by proclamation and beat of drum, &c., and that the service of notice in this case having not admittedly been made in accordance with those rules the service as was made like the service of summons was illegal, and was consequently ineffective, and that as such the Plaintiff's suit must fail.

From the evidence as to the service of the notice, however, I am of the same opinion with the Munsif, that as regards the present Appellant, the notice was personally served upon her. Hence the question is whether the non-service of the notice according to the rules prescribed by the Government and relied on by the Appellant vitiates this personal service or not? I am of opinion that this question must be answered in the negative. The rule referred to simply prescribes a convenient mode of service when the tenants are more than one. It does not lay down that any other mode of service much less personal service would not be sufficient. Of all modes of service, personal service being the best and surest and the notice having been so served on the Appellant, I am of opinion that her contentions based on the above rule must be unavailing and fall to the ground.

The Defendant, Tamasha Bibi, then preferred the present appeal, and the main contention urged on her behalf was as to the question of the legality of the service of notice and the maintainability or otherwise of the present suit.

Held—That where there are more Defendants than one, a notice to quit addressed to all the Defendants jointly in one and the same notice, must be served according to the mode of service prescribed by Rule 3 of Ch. I of the rules made by the Bengal Government, dated the 21st December 1885, under the Bengal Tenancy Act, viz., by proclamation and beat of drums, &c.

That the provision that personal service shall be effected in the manner prescribed for service of summons on a Defendant under the Code of Civil Procedure applies only to the case where the notice is addressed to a single person.

That the notice in the present case not having been served in strict compliance with the rules, the notice was bad and the suit should be dismissed.

Babu Sharat Chandra Roy Chowdhuri for the Appellant.

No one appeared for the Respondent.

Appeal allowed.

REPORTS (See Index.)

WHILE CONGRATULATING MR. JUSTICE STANLEY ON his promotion to the Chief Justiceship of the Allahabad High Court, we cannot but feel exceedingly sorry for losing from amongst us such an industrious, independent and conscientious judge. A strong judge, who is unmoved by any consideration except that of doing justice, may not always have a bland manner on the Bench but that has made him none the less popular with the profession and respected by the public. During the short period of three years that he has sat as a judge both on the Appellate and the Original Side of the Calcutta High Court, he has won for himself the regard and esteem of all. In private life he enjoys the reputation of being as perfect a gentleman as he does in public life of being an upright judge. A judge in India should be free from all prejudice of race, creed, religion and be also above the influence of the executive to be able to deal out justice uniformly to all and public opinion is agreed that such a judge is Mr. Justice Stanley. What is a gain to the North-Western Provinces is a loss to us. It is a great pity that our good judges one after another should be taken away from us. The Bar which is very sorry to part with him, with, we are sure, give him a fitting farewell.

MR. HARRY LUSHINGTON STEPHEN WHO IS TO SUCCEED Mr. Justice Stanley as a puisne judge of the Calcutta High Court is the third son of Sir James Fitz James Stephen, the well known law member of the Legislative Council of the Government of India. We know nothing of the new judge except that he got a second class in the Law Tripos at Cambridge in 1881, joined the Inner Temple in 1882, and was called to the Bar in 1885, and that his name appears amongst barristers practising in the Welsh Circuit.

WE MUST AGAIN PROTEST AGAINST THE PRINCIPLE on which vacancies on the High Court Bench at Calcutta, especially those of barrister judges, are being filled up of late. Both Lord George Hamilton's and Mr. Chalmers's Resolution in this respect has got utterly discredited. Facts would bear out, that able men from the local Bar are always available for filling these vacancies with credit. It is quite incomprehensible to us why the claims of the local Bar should be superseded by men from the junior Bar in England, of whom little or nothing at all is known. Of course, there have been exceptions, but exceptions never prove the rule. In India where a vast amount of codified and customary laws have to be administered by the judges it is absolutely necessary that at least our High Court Judges should be thoroughly familiar with the country's laws, customs and usages and must not like the mofussil magistracy be at school on the bench. We think that no better appointment could have made in this respect than that of Sir V. Bhattacharya Aiyangar to take the place of Mr. Justice Shepherd in the Madras High Court. Why should appointments in the Calcutta High Court be made on a different principle? We do not care whether the non-civilian appointments are given to vakils or barristers, so long as we are satisfied that they are given to really able men.

Review.

THE TRIAL OF CASES. By F. B. Taylor, B. A., I. C. S. Sold for the benefit of the Orphanages at Rs. 3-4, V. P. P., at the Catholic Orphan Press, 4, Portuguese Church Street, Calcutta.

We welcome this work which is an enlarged edition of the author's "Practical Hints to Young Judicial Officers." It consists of three parts, Part I dealing with Criminal Cases; Part II with Civil suits; Part III containing a Synopsis of the Evidence Act, followed by an useful Appendix and Index. We feel no doubt that it will be of great assistance to young officers who have to start in most cases without any proper preliminary training. The important Codes in this country mostly embody rules of practice or case law with which familiarity can only be acquired by practice at the Bar. The provisions of the more important Codes, such as the Evidence Act, the Contract Act, the Transfer of Property Act, being mostly short abstract rules of law derived from such sources, are not always very clearly worded and often help to create confusion unless English cases or text-books are referred to for elucidating them. Youngmen at the Bar devilling for those who have grown old in the practice of law get greater opportunities of acquiring a more clear and comprehensive view of the Codes than a novice from a coaching establishment or a college whose first training in law begins with its administration. But so long as the present anomalous system of recruiting our judicial officers lasts, we shall continue to have men amongst us who develop in them a contempt for legal principles and consider themselves capable of interpreting difficult statutes quite independently of them and according to their own ideas of things. There are, however, some men who have a judicial frame of mind who from the very start set out on the right track and naturally turn out excellent judicial officers. It is but right that such officers should endeavour to instruct junior officers as to the method that has enabled them to administer justice with success. It is from this point of view that that we chiefly prize this publication. It is modest in its aims and singularly free from idiosyncrasies of any kind and presents a thoroughly sound common-sense-view of the subjects with which it deals. The heading to Part I "Be thorough, be accurate and in all matters insist on legal proof" furnishes an admirable motto. The first thing, the author tells us, an officer should endeavour to do is to make a workmanlike record and he might have added, that as he grows in age and experience he should not try to make his record appeal-proof. The author deals with the different stages of a judicial trial, both Civil and Criminal, and gives the reader only a glimpse into the vast fields of procedure and evidence, very properly avoiding details and very judiciously pointing out the principal landmarks to which, if the young judicial officers kept true they would seldom go astray. The author's exposition of the elements of procedure are interspersed with advice which young judicial officers would do well to remember. For instance the author says:—"The judge should not wait for objections when any statement, etc., tendered in evidence is obviously inadmissible or irrelevant." "Do not be impatient with a witness" and the author might have added "Do not unnecessarily interfere with witnesses when they are being examined by the parties represented by their lawyers." The Chapters on Determination of Punishment and the Form and Nature of Sentences deserve special attention. We commend the following observations to the attention of our Magistracy. "Arbitrary and fanciful sentences should not be passed" and "the sensibility of the individual offender must be taken into account with due regard to sex and age, health and strength, illness and infirmity and even to rank and social position and education and habitual occupations." The synopsis of the Evidence Act appended at the conclusion of the book contains a very useful analysis and enables one to have a comprehensive view of the Evidence Act at a glance.

COURT OF APPEAL. BEALE v. BOND. Before the MASTER OF THE ROLLS and LORD JUSTICES COLLINS and ROMER. 20th February 1901.

House agent—Interpolation of contract—Terms special—Not ordinary commission.

The facts of this case are reported in Vol. 4, C. W. N., at p. ccx.

The Court of Appeal arrived at the conclusion that the cases of Fisher v. Drenitt (48 L. J. Q. B. 32) and Passingham v. King (14 The Times L. R. 392) which had been relied on by the Divisional Court, were not applicable to this case, those cases being guides where the contract was for ordinary commission to be paid to the house agent. Here the owner of the property which he placed in the hands of the Defendant to sell had made a special bargain about it, viz., that he agreed to accept £1,150 for the property "and you are at liberty to receive anything over and above that as commission, it being understood that I am to receive £1,150 without deduction." Defendant had procured a Mr. Rosenberg as purchaser who had paid down £25 as deposit on the sum of £1,250 for which he contracted to purchase. Mr. Rosenberg failed to complete. The Plaintiff had sued to recover the deposit from Defendant, the latter had counterclaimed £100; this counterclaim was allowed by the Divisional Court, and was now refused. The Appeal Court supported the decision of the Deputy Judge of the City of London Court who had awarded to Defendant five guineas.

The question in this case was whether the Magistrate was right in convicting the printer and publisher of the "Sun" newspaper under the above Act for the publication of a certain number of that paper containing a scheme for the sale of certain chances in what the learned Magistrate considered was a lottery. The paper appeared with certain spots of various sizes and configurations, and it was announced therein that prizes would be given to those who selected those that were meant to be the winning spots.

The Court held that the conviction was right. There was no question of any skill having been employed in the matter. What the Appellant did was to sell the paper with the chance of gaining a lottery prize. The purchaser of the paper had in his mind the chance of winning the prize. The owner may have had the object in view of advertising his paper, and not making money out of the scheme, but that did not take it out of the words of sec. 41 of the above Act.

Mr. Horac Avory, K. C., and Mr. Muir in support.

CHANCERY DIVISION.—THE NEW YORK SECURITY TRUST COMPANY v. KEYSER. Before MR. JUSTICE COZENS HARDY. 21st January 1901.

Title of a foreign curator to sue in this country—Money of a lunatic in Court, and in hands of trustees in this country.

The Plaintiffs in this suit are the abovenamed company who are authorized and directed by the New York Court (as the appointed committees of the person and property of a Mrs. Samuels, a widow born in America and in a lunatic asylum there) to take proceedings in this country for payment of the moneys and property belonging to her in this country in Court and in the hands of trustees. The company was joined by one Ticket as Mrs. Samuels' next friend as co-Plaintiff. Though born in America and now in a lunatic asylum there, it was assumed for the purposes of this suit that her domicile became on her marriage and continues English.

The trustees as Defendants submitted to the decision of the Court so as to be protected in the matter. Mrs. Samuels was adjudged by the New York Court incompetent to manage herself or her affairs.

If Mrs. Samuels were domiciled in New York, the matter for decision would have been determined by the decision of the Court of Appeal in Deedisheorn v. London and Westminster Bank (1900, 2 Ch. 15), her domicile being English differentiated this case from that. The learned Judge states in his judgment that the real reason for the Court allowing such a proceeding is that the matter is for the benefit of Mrs. Samuels and only in so far as it is or such benefit, Beale v. Smith (9 Ch. Ap. 85), the Plaintiff company was competent to receive and give good discharge for her money and it is to them that the money is asked to be paid not to her next friend who may be anyone. The learned Judge was satisfied that everything was being done satisfactory towards Mrs. Samuels, Scott v. Bentley (1 K. and J. 281), and there was no reason why the discretionary power vested in him should not be exercised. Defendants' costs would be paid out of the fund in the Court, and Plaintiffs' prayer would be granted.

ORDER.—That balance funds in Court and those in trustee's hands should be paid to Plaintiff company as committees. Liberty to trustees to pay future income to same, until further order, with liberty to apply.

Mr. Danckwerts, Q. C., and Mr. Methold for the Plaintiffs.

Mr. Macnaghten, Q. C., and Mr. Alexander for the Defendants.

PROBATE COURT.—In the goods of JOHN ALEXANDER SCOTT, deceased. Before MR. JUSTICE BARNES, 11th June 1901.

Creditor—Administration.

Colonel John Alexander Scott died in the Punjab, India, in February 1900, intestate leaving a widow and a daughter. Neither of those ladies applied for administration. The deceased was at the time of his death in debt to one Ram Chand or Chunder, son of Dyal Chand of Sealkote in the Punjab. £119 were due to that gentleman under a decree he had secured from the Subordinate Judge of Sealkote. The deceased appeared to have about £60 in the Army and Navy Stores. Babu Ram Chand through his attorney applied for and obtained on 13th May last a citation on those ladies calling upon them to apply for administration or show cause. The citation was served and as no appearance was entered, the learned Judge made the grant to Petitioner after hearing Mr. Pritchard in support of the application.

Judgment, 13, June.

KONG YEE LONE & Co.,
Defendants, Appellants,

LOWJEE NANJEE,
Plaintiff, Respondent.

This was an appeal against a decision of the Recorder of Rangoon in an action brought by the Respondent ordering that the Appellants should pay to the Respondent the sum of Rs. 1,23,625 with interest at 6 per cent.

The action was brought by the abovenamed Lowjee Nanjee who trades under the name of Robert Sutherland & Co. against the Defendants who trade as Kong Yee Lone & Co. upon two promissory notes, the Defendants being Wong Kaim Sew (Defendant No. 1), Wong Kain Choay and Kong Wain. The promissory notes, both dated 11th September 1899, were for Rs. 1,27,820 and Rs. 5,198, of which the former was alleged to have been given for differences upon rice transactions, and the latter for brokerage. The defence was that the notes were not signed by anyone who was authorized to bind the firm and that they were given for wagering transactions and therefore could not be enforced.

The notes were in the following terms:—"on demand we, the undersigned Kong Yee Lone & Co., promise to pay to Messrs. Robert Sutherland & Co. or order the sum of rupees one lac twenty-seven thousand eight hundred and twenty only for value received in difference on rice."

Signed in Chinese character.

(Sd.) KONG YEE LONE & Co. (in English).

Note. The translation of the above Chinese character is Kwong ship Leang.

The second note exactly in the same terms was for "value received in brokerage." The Recorder pronounced the following judgment:—

The Plaintiff in this case is a broker and also a dealer in rice. During the year 1899 he had dealings with the Defendants who are rice-millers and bought rice to a very large extent from them. Some of the rice he took delivery of and paid for. In other cases he resold the rice to the millers. According to his evidence these transactions were carried out on behalf of the Defendants by one Kaim Sew who has absconded. On the 11th of September the Defendants' firm owed the Plaintiff a sum of Rs. 1,27,820 for "differences," and Kaim Sew gave the Plaintiff a pro. note Exhibit A for this amount "for value received in difference on rice." He also gave him another pro. note for Rs. 5,198-1 "for value received in brokerage." Subsequently the Plaintiff received two bills from the Defendants against one Moolla Abdool Bahim for Rs. 10,500. He collected this sum, and after giving the Defendants credit for it sued for the balance Rs. 1,23,625-12.

It is not disputed that the second word in the Chinese signature on the pro. note does not read "Yee." Some witnesses say that part of it reads "ship" others that it is unintelligible.

The Defendants' case is first that the business of the firm was carried on by one Puck Chan until he became ill towards the end of 1898 and that subsequently it was carried on by one Cheng Wa. I have no doubt however after Mr. Mack's evidence that the business was carried on by Kaim Sew and there is one very significant fact in support of this, namely, that the Defendants have not been able to call any independent evidence to show that at the time of the transactions between Plaintiff and Defendants' firm the business was carried on by Chang Wa. But it is not disputed that Kaim Sew was a member of the Defendants' firm, and as a member of the firm he would be entitled to carry on business on its behalf, and no private arrangement between the partners, not communicated to the plaintiff would bind him. I hold then that Kaim Sew did carry on the business of the Defendants' firm and had power to bind it by the notes in dispute.

Then the Defendants' case further is that the notes were not signed in such a manner as to bind the firm, and evidence has been given to show that when borrowing money from the firm of R. M. M. A. the pro. notes were signed by three of the partners and the "chop" mark of the firm affixed. But Cheng Wa has to admit that he alone signed contracts in the name of the firm and did not use the "chop" mark. It has also been argued on the authority of Kirk v. Blurton (9 M. and W. 284) where the signature "John Blurton & Co. instead of "John Blurton" the true style of the partnership was held not to bind the firm, that as the second word in the signature is not "Yee" the Defendants are not bound. Other authorities were referred to, to the same effect, Stephens v. Reynolds (5 Ex. 512); Faith v. Richmond (11 A. and E. 339); Leverton v. Lane (13 C. B. 278), and Yorkshire Banking Co. v. Beaton (L. R. 5 C. P. D. 109).

I do not consider however that these authorities can apply in such a case as this where the signature is in a language unknown to the person taking the document purporting to bind the firm. It is different in England where the signature is in a language known to both parties. It would be impossible to carry on business in such a town as Rangoon if it was necessary for a person taking a document purporting to be signed by a partner in the name of the firm to satisfy himself that the name was correctly signed. Documents may be, and are signed everyday in mercantile offices in Chinese, Burmese, Hindustani, Bengali, Tamil, Telugu, Gujarati, Hebrew, and other languages. No firm, or at all events very few firms, could possibly keep a collection of expert clerks who could inform them whether the signatures were correct. The question in every case must be whether the person signing purported to sign the name of the firm. It would open the door to fraud of the gravest character to hold otherwise.

Then it was argued on behalf of the Defendants that the transactions were gambling transactions and were to the knowledge of the Plaintiff fraudulent as against their firm. As to this last charge there is no evidence whatever. The question as to gambling is settled by The Universal Stock Exchange v. Strachan (L. R. [1897] App. Cas. 166). That was a case of bargain and sale of stock. Cave, J., in summing up said:—"A man goes to a broker and directs him to buy and sell so much stock as the case may be. That may be in the eye of the purchaser a gambling transaction or it may not. If he means to invest his money in the purchase of the stock which he orders to be bought that undoubtedly is a perfectly legitimate and real business transaction. If he does not mean to take up his stock, if he means to sell again before the settling day arrives, that may be a gambling transaction so far as he is concerned, but it is not necessarily a gambling transaction so far as the broker is concerned; and in order to be a gambling transaction such as the law points at, it must be a gambling transaction in the intention of both the parties to it.....notwithstanding these ostensible terms of business was there a secret understanding that the stock should never be dealt with?" This summing up was held to be perfectly accurate.

The question then is "was there a common intention to wager." I do not see how I can so hold having regard to the fact that rice was in certain instances delivered and paid for. In the case I have just referred to and in In re Gieve (L. R. [1899] Q. B. D. 794) there never was any transfer of stock at all. In my opinion the Plaintiff is entitled to succeed and there will be a decree for the amount claimed with interest from date of decree at 6 per cent. with costs.

For the Appellants Mr. Arthur Cohen, K. C.; and Mr. James Fox contended, criticising the evidence, that the Recorder was wrong in holding that Wong Kain Sew, the 1st Defendant (who had disappeared from Rangoon on or about 31st October 1899, the date the action was commenced, and had not been since heard of) was the managing partner of Defendants' firm or had authority to bind that firm. That there was no evidence that the signature to the promissory notes was either that of the firm, or such as they were in the habit of using.

That the so-called contracts for the differences on which the promissory notes were given were gaming and wagering transactions; that there was no consideration for the small note; and that they could not be sued on or enforced in law. Sec. 30 of the Indian Contract Act was noticed and The Universal Stock Exchange v. Strachan (1896, A. C. 166) and Ex parte Gieve (1899, 1 Q. B. D. 794) were commented on.

For the Respondent Mr. Danckwerts and Mr. Mayne in addition to commenting on the above cases contended that the transactions were legal and binding, and Wong Kain Sew had ample authority to bind the Defendant firm. They referred to Forbes v. Marshall (11 Exch. 166 at p. 175). It was submitted that the Indian contract was narrower than the English Act; see sec. 30. It did not contain "gaming" Farget v. Osteguy (1895, App. Cas. 318 at p. 323); secs. 17 and 18, Indian Registration Act.

Mr. Cohen replied.

LORD HOBHOUSE delivered their Lordships' decision advising His Majesty to allow the appeal with costs.

The judgment deals with the provisions of sec. 30 of the Indian Contract Act.

Mr. Arthur Cohen, K. C., and Mr. James Fox for the Appellants.

Mr. Danckwerts, K. C., and Mr. Mayne for the Respondent.

Mortgage suit when principal below Rs. 1,000—Court-fees payable by Defendant, scale of.

The question for the consideration of the Hon'ble Judges was as to whether the Court-fees payable by a puisne mortgagee and a Defendant in a mortgage suit whose claim is under Rs. 1,000 should be on the special scale or on scale No. 2 where the Plaintiff's mortgage debt is above Rs. 1,000.

THE COURT.—We are of opinion that the Court-fees payable by the Defendant whose principal sum due on the mortgage does not exceed Rs. 1,000 should be on the special scale.

APPEALS FROM ORDERS
Nos. 165 AND 182 OF 1900.

HILL, J.
BRETT, J.
1901.
25, June.

JAMINI MOHAN CHOWDHURY and another,
Judgment-debtors, Appellants,

v.

CHANDRA KUMAR ROY and another,
Decree-holders, Respondents.

Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), secs. 291; 311—Application to set aside sales—Irregularity in the publishing of sale proclamations—Prejudice—Inadequacy of price consequent upon the irregularities—Absence of sufficient bidders—Series of postponements of less than seven days aggregating to more than seven days—Fresh proclamation if necessary—Absence of hour appointed for sale in the order for postponement—Setting aside of sale—Postponement made to depend upon contingencies, if proper.

• These were two appeals preferred on the 7th of May 1900, against the orders of A. Pennell, Esq., District Judge of Noakhali, dated the 31st of March 1900.

The facts of the case were shortly as follows:—

The judgment-debtors, Appellants, were the shareholders in two permanent howla tenures, and their interest in these tenures were sold in execution of certain rent decrees. These two appeals arose out of applications made by the Appellants under sec. 311 of the Code of Civil Procedure to set aside the sale of those tenures in consequence of material irregularities in connection with the sale and the consequent substantial injury to them. The application, out of which the appeal No. 165 of 1900 arose, related to a 5 annas share, and the application out of which appeal No. 182 of 1900 arose, related roughly to a 6 annas share in those howlas respectively.

On the 23rd September 1899 the decree-holders obtained decrees against the judgment-debtors in respect of rent due for these howla interests, and on the 23rd November of the same year they applied for execution of their decrees and the 15th of January 1900 was then fixed for the sale. On the 12th January the judgment-debtors applied for stay of execution under the provisions of sec. 546 of the Code of Civil Procedure, they having preferred an appeal to the High Court against the decrees. On this application the District Judge directed that the sale should be adjourned to the 22nd January in order to enable the judgment-debtors to furnish the requisite security. Then on the 22nd January the Judge by an order of that date directed that as it was necessary to test the property pledged by the debtors, this property was to be tested by the Nazir of the Munsif's Court and the Nazir was directed to submit his report in regard to the sufficiency of the property as security on or before the 27th January, and the sale was accordingly adjourned to the 27th. On the 27th it was recorded in the order-sheet that the report of the Nazir had not yet been received and that the sale stood adjourned to the 1st February.

On the 1st February the report of the Nazir would seem to have been received. An order of that date stated that the security offered was altogether insufficient and that the District Judge therefore refused to stay execution and directed that the sale should proceed. On the same day the property in dispute in these appeals was sold and purchased by the decree-holders. Subsequently on the 2nd March the judgment-debtors made the application under sec. 311, Civil Procedure Code, out of which these appeals arose. The irregularities of which they complained were, firstly, that the sale proclamations had not, in compliance with the provisions of sec. 287 read with sec. 274 of the Code, been fixed upon the property to be sold; secondly, it was contended that the provisions of sec. 291 of the Code had been violated inasmuch as there had been a postponement of the sale for more than 7 days without the issue of a fresh sale proclamation, and then they also complained that the orders postponing the sale were improper as they had been made to depend upon contingencies, and that it was impossible under the circumstances that intending buyers could know at what time the sale would take place. There was another objection also based on the fact that in the orders by which the sale was postponed there was no hour fixed at which the sale should take place.

The District Judge overruled these objections.

Against that order of the District Judge the judgment-debtors preferred these two appeals, and on their behalf the same objections, as were taken before the Judge, were urged.

Held—That the fixing of the sale-proclamation upon the property not of the judgment-debtor but of the decree-holder at a distance of some half-a mile from the judgment-debtor's property violated the principles on which the law on the mode of serving a proclamation is founded; and that there was in this respect a material irregularity in the publishing of the sale.

That a series of short postponements of less than seven days which amounted in the aggregate to more than seven days were equivalent in the sense of sec. 291 of the Code of Civil Procedure to a postponement of more than seven days, and a fresh proclamation of sale would be necessary; and a failure to issue a fresh proclamation of sale, in the present case, after the postponement of the sale to the 1st February, was a material irregularity in the sense of sec. 311 of the Code. Satish Chunder Rai Chowdhuri v. Thomas (1. L. R. 11 Cal. 658) referred to.

That in this case the Court inferred as a matter of fact that the inadequacy of price was due to the paucity of bidders which was directly the result of the irregularities in the publishing of the sale upon which the judgment-debtors had placed reliance.

That orders for postponement of sale should not be made to depend upon contingencies and that the hour at which the sale would be held should be mentioned in the order of postponement in order to give notice to intending bidders.

Surnomoyee Deli v. Dakhina Ranjan Sanyal, (I. L. R. 24 Cal. 291) referred to and followed.

That there was a very substantial difference between the price fetched at the sale and the actual value of the property resulting in material and substantial injury to the judgment-debtors and the sale was vitiated, and should be set aside.

Mr. A. M. Bose and Babu Baikunta Nath Das for the Appellants.

Dr. Rashbehary Ghose and Babus Lal Mohan Das and Akhoy Kumar Banerjee for the Respondents.

Order and sale set aside.

v.

THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA IN COUNCIL and ors., Defendants, Respondents.

MACLEAN, C. J.
BANERJEE, J.
1901.

Heard, 10 and 13, May.
Judgment, 26, June.

Suit for possession and mesne profits and damages—Attachment under the criminal law of property believed to belong to absconding accused—Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), sec. 88—Act XVIII of 1850—Liability of Government for mesne profits and damages—Period for which liable—Proper parties to suit—Release of property after suit and before judgment, whether affects liability and suit—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), sec. 212—Partnership, determination of on death of some member of firm after decree—Representatives of deceased members—Contract Act (IX of 1872), sec. 253, cl. 10—Express contract if necessary to fix liability—Attachment caused by private prosecutor, whether absolves Government from liability to pay damages.

These two appeals were preferred on the 14th June and 18th July 1898 respectively, against the decrees of C. P. Caspersz, Esq., Additional District Judge of 24-Pergunnahs, dated the 2nd April 1898, passed on appeal against the decrees of Babu Bulloram Mukhick, Subordinate Judge, first Court, of Alipur, dated the 27th January 1897.

These two appeals arose out of a suit brought by the Plaintiff-Respondent, Sreemuty Jagat Mohini Dasi, in the first-mentioned appeal against the Secretary of State for India in Council, Messrs. Ralli Brothers and Baroda Prosad Roy Chaudhuri, for recovery of possession of certain immoveable property, namely, a garden with mesne profits. The allegations in the plaint on which the suit was based were shortly these:—That the property in dispute belonged to the Plaintiff; that Defendant No. 2, Messrs. Ralli Brothers, having instituted criminal proceedings against Defendant No. 3, Baroda Prosad Roy Chaudhuri, and the accused not having appeared, the property in dispute was, on the 1st of July 1895, attached at the instance of Defendant No. 2 under sec. 88 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, as the property of the accused; that the Plaintiff was thereby dispossessed from the garden, many of the trees in it had been destroyed for want of proper care, and the garden had remained in the possession of the servants of Defendant No. 1, the Secretary of State; and that notwithstanding that the Plaintiff served Defendant No. 1 with a notice under sec. 424 of the Code of Civil Procedure before bringing this suit, the property in dispute had not been released to her.

The Defendant No. 1 in his defence alleged that the property in dispute was attached by the Criminal Court at the instance of Defendant No. 2, and that the accused Baroda Prosad Roy Chaudhuri did not appear within the time specified in the proclamation issued against him or at any time. He also disputed the Plaintiff's title to the garden in suit, and he denied his liability generally. The Defendant No. 2 denied liability. Defendant No. 3 did not enter appearance. The property was released from the attachment after the filing of the written statement. The Subordinate Judge gave the Plaintiff a decree against Defendants Nos. 1 and 2, and directed that the amount of the mesne profits and damages be ascertained in execution of the decree. Against that decree Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 preferred separate appeals, and the Additional District Judge dismissed the appeal of the former and decreed that of the latter.

Against this decree of the District Judge Defendant No. 1 preferred appeal No. 1164, urging that upon the facts found, no case was made out against him, and the Plaintiff preferred appeal No. 1392 in which he urged that upon the fact, found the liability of Defendant No. 2 was made out, and that the Court below was wrong in exonerating Defendant No. 2 from liability.

Held—That the attachment of the property under sec. 88 of the Code of Criminal Procedure having been made by the Magistrate in the discharge of judicial duties and no want of good faith having been imputed either to the Magistrate or to the police-officers who acted under his orders both the Magistrate and the police-officers are protected by Act XVIII of 1850; and that the Defendant No. 1 could not be made liable for mesne profits and damages for any period preceding the date on which the property, if it had been the property of the absconding offender, would have come to be at the disposal of Government under sec. 88.

That the property in suit being admittedly the property of the Plaintiff and it having been attached as the property of Defendant No. 3, and that the fact being that at the date of the suit, the property, if it had been rightly attached, would have been either actually at the disposal of Government, or likely soon to be at its disposal, and Government not having repudiated its connection with the property when notice of this suit was given or at any time before, the Plaintiff was right in making Defendant No. 1 a party to the suit, so that the question of title might be decided in his presence and possession might be awarded as against him.

That the release of the property from attachment after the filing of the written statement and only a few days before judgment was pronounced in Plaintiff's favour by the first Court could not affect the suit.

That the Defendant No. 1 was liable for mesne profits and damages in respect of the period subsequent to the date, when the property, if rightly attached, would have come to be at the disposal of Government under sec. 88 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, which date should, along with the amount of mesne profits and damages, be ascertained in execution proceedings under sec. 212 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

In appeal No. 1392—That the operation of sec. 253, cl. (10) of the Contract Act (IX of 1872), is subject to express contract and the Defendants who have special means of knowledge on the subject not having shown that there was no contract to the contrary or that the persons substituted in the place of certain Defendants, members of the firm of Messrs. Rulli Brothers who had died since the date of the lower Appellate Court's decree were not proper parties, the appeal can properly proceed.

That upon the finding of the Court below that "the Defendant No. 2, a private prosecutor, through legal and other agents, did cause the attachment to be effected," Defendant No. 2 must be held liable for damages and mesne profits.

Shabjan Bibi v. Sheikh Sheriatullah (12 W. R. 324) referred to and followed.

Lock v. Ashton (12 Q. B. 871) distinguished.

In No. 1164 Babu Ram Charan Mitter and Babu Srish Chandra Choudhuri for the Appellants.

REPORTS (See Index.)

THE LORD MAYOR OF LONDON IN PROPOSING THE toast to His Majesty at the banquet at which he detained the judges proposed “The King, member of the Middle Temple and Barrister-at-Law.” His Majesty was delighted his guests and will no doubt delight the profession in India. His Majesty was called to the Bar at the Middle Temple and was made Benchers forty years ago and also acted as its treasurer in 1887.

THE BUSINESS BEFORE THE JUDICIAL COMMITTEE does not appear to be heavy. Of the fifteen appeals the list, nine were from India, three from Canada, two from Australia and New Zealand and one from the Extra-territorial Court of Constantinople.

ALTHOUGH THE LIST OF APPEALS BEFORE THE JUDICIAL COMMITTEE may not be heavy yet their Lordships do not appear to be any the less expeditious disposing of them. In the course of the first week's sitting last term their Lordships had finished the hearing in seven of the Indian appeals. The case of Adgar involved questions of complicated accounts and was likely to last for two days more.

The criminal case of Subramanyer Iyer v. King-Emperor, was to have come off before a special Court on Wednesday the 5th June last.

JUDGING FROM THE PROGRESS OF JUDICIAL WORK in the House of Lords we have no reason to congratulate ourselves at the prospect of the Judicial Committee being merged into the House of Lords. Out of the 28 appeals before the Lords last term fourteen had reappeared in the list from that of the previous session. In two appeals, judgment appears to have been reserved for over two terms, in three more, since the last term and in one, since last year. Although the Judicial Committee may occasionally have to reserve judgments in cases which require consideration, yet it is seldom that we find a judgment reserved beyond a term. From a comparative view of the progress of business in the two final Courts of Appeal we have come to doubt whether we shall have anything to gain from there being one Imperial Court of Appeal for the whole Empire. The appointment of Sir John Edge to represent India in the Committee for the consideration of the scheme has also seriously shaken our confidence in it.

AN ADVOCATE WHO FEARLESSLY DISCHARGES HIS DUTIES may become an object of admiration to the world quite apart from the merits of the case he pleads. Sir Francis Jeune in proposing the toast to Maître Labori at the Lord Mayor's dinner emphasised this fact in the following terms:—

Lawyers, at any rate, knew the difference between the merit of a cause and the merit of an advocate engaged in it; and what they were there to honour and what they desired to honour was not the cause or any cause in which Maître Labori had been engaged, but they desired to honour the advocate and the man.

MAÎTRE LABORI'S POPULARITY IN PROFESSIONAL circles in England may well be estimated from the following account that he gave of himself at Lord Mayor's dinner. It is remarkable how in doing honour to an able counsel the judges in England also freely joined. Maître Labori in returning thanks said:—

For the past ten days his life had been an uninterrupted fête—a fête the more dear to his mind and to his heart because it was a professional fête. He might say to all his hosts of the past ten days who were present that he would not forget the banquet of the Hardwicke Society. He would never forget it as long as he lived. That banquet, so dear to his heart, had been succeeded by fêtes not less charming. On the day following the Hardwicke Society's banquet the Lord Chief Justice of England himself did him the honour to ask him to be present at a sitting of his Court. Sir Charles Darling and other Judges had done the same. On Tuesday Lincoln's Inn wished to receive him, and he hoped Mr. Justice Mathew, whom he had known long before, would forgive him for having committed a grave indiscretion in this country. When he read on the invitation of Lincoln's Inn "no speeches," he went there and passed a most excellent evening and ate a splendid dinner. But to his surprise, when they passed from the hall to the Benchers' apartment, where they had many bottles of excellent wine, Mr. Justice Mathew said that there was a strict law which forbade speaking on those occasions, but that it, like other laws, could be violated, and he addressed him in charming and graceful words to which he was naturally bound to reply. Then that morning he had been to the Middle Temple, where he had seen the barristers, at luncheon in their hall, and had again been received with cordiality. That night it was Sir F. Jeune, who rose to propose a toast in his honour. He rose in the midst of the Judges of England and the colonels at the table of the Lord Mayor of London.

There can be no better proof of the high respect in which law and the legal profession is held in England.

MAETRE LABOURI'S ATTITUDE AT THESE PUBLIC RECEPTIONS will be best understood from the concluding lines of his speech.

Now that he was about to leave them, his true friends and dear comrades, he would like to reiterate that which had rendered the welcome precious was the fact that he was here as a simple citizen, a private man, and an advocate and the liberty of an advocate was such that he could rise in the midst of the advocates of another country knowing that he would not utter a word or even raise a thought which would be regarded as in any way inimical to the love which every true citizen had for his country, when that country was one of freedom and justice.

COULD PRIVATE ASSOCIATIONS RANK AS CONSTITUENCIES.

The revised Regulations of 1899 issued under 55 and 56 Vict., C. 14, by the Government of India for the election of members of the Bengal Legislative Council are in some respects a constitutional curiosity. The latest in this respect is Reg. II, D., which proposes that in Bengal the landholders might elect a representative for the Council through the medium of some association or associations that the local Government may from time to time nominate on this behalf. The local Government has, of late, in supercession of a seat formerly reserved for a group of mofussil municipalities, called upon a private association of persons in this city to elect a member on behalf of the land-holders of Bengal. The right of this association to elect a member on behalf of the landlords is being questioned. It is said that there are many members in that association who do not pay a pice of land revenue or own any revenue-paying land and yet they are now through this new indulgence of the Government entitled to elect a member on behalf of the land holders of Bengal who are a very large class and who are insufficiently represented in that body. A further source of anomaly is said to be that there is a class of members belonging to this association who only own land in this town, to which the Bengal Tenancy Act, does not apply and it is urged with considerable force that it is not fair that they should take part in the election although they may not be governed by the same laws. Further, that the interests of the landlords in Calcutta are already sufficiently represented in Council by the member for the Calcutta Corporation and the new seat created by the Reg. 1899 must be meant for land-holders owning land outside Presidency town.

Without pronouncing upon the merits of such contentions, we may say, that we are certain of one thing and that is, that no private association or body of men can on any principle be raised into constituencies. The reason is simple enough. Every association not incorporated either by charters or by or under any statute, is more or less an informal body. No legal check can be exercised over their action or mode of conducting business. Not being incorporated under the law they are free to alter their rules or to deviate from them or indulgences without any risk of their action being called into question in a Court of law and of being declared ultra vires. This in itself, we venture to think is sufficient reason why private associations should not be converted by the Government into an electorate. "Legislation by rules" is a growing evil in India and this is but an instance how such rule may run counter to the fundamental principles of law and legislation.

Apart from general principles we consider it but just that the revenue paying zemindars of Bengal should protest against a rule that empowers the non-revenue paying members of any particular association to have a voice in the election of their representative. It is still more hard on them that the membership of an association which can be secured, as they allege, on a promise, not always followed by payment, of a subscription, should be clothed with powers to return members to the Provincial Legislature to the exclusion of thousands of people who actually pay, perhaps, hundred times more in land-revenue under the penalty of sunset-laws. Such land-holders are scattered all over this Presidency. They do not care nor is it convenient to them to become members of associations situate in Calcutta. As for the few who happen to be members, what guarantee is there against any powerful clique swamping them by admitting or recognising as members, as many "gentlemen of Indian origin as may be desirous of promoting their objects?" No land but mere "Indian origin" being the only qualification that is said to be required for becoming a member of the association. Such being the status of the electorate which now lays claim to represent the land-holders of Bengal, though many of the prominent members of that community are known to disclaim any connection with it, it would be no wonder if the election would end in a fiasco.

Be that as it may, it is to be deplored that the Executive Government should play in this manner with Parliamentary Statutes which were seriously intended for the reconstitution of the Indian Legislatures, partially though it be, on a representative basis. If, however, what has been done by the Bengal Government, is now too late to be undone, we would urge on the Government to avoid its repetition in the future and to take the earliest opportunity of amending Reg. II, D. of the Regulations of 1899 on the lines that the Government of Bombay has adopted for securing representatives of land-holders in that Presidency.

The Bombay Regulation which seems to us to be far more reasonable in this respect, provides by Reg. D (i) that one member is to be returned in the local Council by the Sirdars of Deccan as contained in a list prepared in conformity with a Government Resolution defining the qualifications requisite for the exercise of the franchise. Then in a second seat in the same Council is allotted Reg. II, D (ii) to land-holders of Sind and the requisite qualification of a zemindar voter is that he must pay not less than Rs. 1,000 annually as ordinary land revenue. If the Bengal Government could confer on the zemindars of this Presidency franchise on some similar basis there will be no scope for any fiasco. Otherwise it is difficult to say what evil fruit may grow from the seeds of dissension that the Government may have unwittingly sown by the adoption of the present course.

CHANCERY DIVISION.—In re THE RHODESIAN PROPERTIES, LIMITED. Before Mr. JUSTICE WRIGHT. 12th June 1901.

Solicitor, his retaining fee—Winding up of company.

The articles of Association of the above company inter alia provided, that Messrs. Birchall shall be the solicitors of the company at an annual retaining fee of 100 guineas. Mr. George Birchall giving his address the same as that of the solicitors presented a petition for the winding up of the company. The debt alleged to be due to him was made up of among others a fee which he credited as '£105 retaining fee to 1901.'

For the company the debt was disputed, its insolvency was denied, and objections were taken also to the impropriety of procedure.

The learned Judge was of opinion that the action of the solicitor was an abuse of the process of the Court. The action of the solicitor in embodying in the articles of association such an unusual clause for his own benefit did not meet with the approval of the Judge; before doing so he should have explained to the Directors and possibly to the shareholders and given them an opportunity of taking independent advice. He doubted whether the solicitor was entitled to the retaining fee he claimed, and he was not satisfied that the insolvency of the company was proved; the petition must be dismissed.

BABU GUNGA BAKSH SINGH,

BABU DALIP SINGH and others,
Defendants, Respondents.

Act XIV of 1891, sec. 8.

This was an appeal from a decree of the Additional Judicial Commissioner of Oudh dismissing the Plaintiff's appeal to him.

Mr. Deyrugther for the Appellant submitted that under Sec. 8, Act XIV of 1891, the Additional Judicial Commissioner had no jurisdiction, sitting alone, to hear the appeal, it should have been heard by him and the Judicial Commissioner sitting together.

Mr. Mayne for the Respondents admitted that that appeared to be so.

During the course of the arguments 4 L. A., p. 178, and Ex parte Anderson (L. R. 5 Ch. App. 473) were mentioned—also that no costs were allowed by their Lordships.

• A discussion then took place whether their Lordships should hear the appeal granting special leave to Appellant and remand the case for trial by a proper Court of Appeal.

In the result their Lordships gave judgment discharging the decree of the Additional Judicial Commissioner and remanding the cause to be tried by a properly-constituted Court of Appeal.

LORD ROBERTSON.

SIR RICHARD COUCH.

RADHA KRISHN DAS,

Appellant,

v.

RAI BISHUN CHAND,

Respondent.

Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1885), secs. 595, 596 and 600—Leave to appeal to the Privy Council—Value of appeal—Case under Rs. 2,000.

This was an appeal against the decision of the High Court of Allahabad, which reversed the decision of the Subordinate Judge of Benares.

Mr. Mayne for the Appellant.

Mr. A. J. Wallach for the Respondent.

Mr. Wallach took a preliminary objection on the ground that leave for appeal has been granted under sec. 596 of the Code of Civil Procedure, although the amount in question and the subject-matter was under the value of Rs. 10,000, that is to say, two thousand rupees.

The petition for leave to appeal contains the following paragraph:—

‘That though the valuation of the appeal is below Rs. 10,000, it involves substantial questions of law and fact.

‘The Petitioner being desirous to appeal to Her Majesty in Council, humbly prays that this Hon. Court may be pleased to grant certificate under sec. 596 of the Code of Civil Procedure for the following grounds.’

Thereupon two of the Judges of the High Court made the following order:—

‘Let certificate issue, that the case is a fit one for appeal to Her Majesty in Council.’

In the application for leave to appeal the same Judges certified—

‘That though the valuation of the case is below Rs. 10,000, yet as regards the value and nature of the case, it fulfils the requirements of sec. 596 of Act No. XIV of 1882.’

Mr. Wallach submitted that leave to appeal should have been asked for under sec. 595 (c) and sec. 600 of the Civil Procedure Code.

Sec. 595 (c): “An appeal shall lie to Her Majesty in Council from any decree, when the case as herein-after provided is certified to be one fit for appeal to Her Majesty in Council.”

Sec. 600: “Every petition under sec. 595 must state the grounds of appeal and pray for a certificate either that as regards amount or value and nature, the case fulfils the requirements of sec. 596 or that it is otherwise a fit one for appeal to Her Majesty in Council.”

The circumstances of this case did fulfil the requirements of sec. 596, and the certificate granted by the High Court was contradictory in itself. The High Court ought to have granted a certificate under secs. 595 (c) and 600, i.e., that although the amount is under Rs. 10,000 the case is otherwise a fit one for appeal to Her Majesty in Council.

Banarsi Parshad v. Kashi Krishna Narain and another (L. R. 27 I. A. 11).

Mr. Mayne.—A mistake was made by the Registrar—it is a clerical error and should have been sec. 595.

The mistake is not such a one, that the Appellant should be debarred from being heard.

LORD DAVEY delivered their Lordships’ judgment to the following effect:—The application for leave to appeal “is made under sec. 596 (reads the section). That section states clearly that the amount in question must be Rs. 10,000 or upwards. In this case the amount is Rs. 2,000. The case cited and decided by the Board is quite clear.” It is true that by secs. 595 and 600 an appeal may be granted, if the High Court certifies that the case is fit for appeal “and otherwise,” i.e., when not meeting the conditions of sec. 596.

That is clearly intended to meet special cases such, for example, as those in which the point in dispute is not measurable by money, though it may be of great public or private importance. To certify that a case is of that kind, though it is left entirely in the discretion of the Court, is a judicial process, which could not be performed without special exercise of that discretion, evinced by the fitting certificate. The certificate runs:—

“That though the valuation of the case is below Rs. 10,000, yet as regards the value and the nature of the case, it fulfils the requirements of sec. 596 of Act No. XIV of 1882.”

It does nothing of the kind, because the value and nature of a case under sec. 596 must be Rs. 10,000 or upwards.

In granting the certificate the Judges of the High Court performed a ministerial act, and they did not use their judicial functions and discretion in granting the certificate as they ought to have done under sec. 600.

And under the circumstances their Lordships are of opinion that the preliminary objection taken is a good one, they will humbly advise His Majesty to dismiss the appeal.

The Appellants are ordered to pay costs.

Appeal dismissed.

CALCUTTA HIGH COURT.

[ORDINARY] ORIGINAL CIVIL JURISDICTION.

In the matter of sec. 622 of the Civil Procedure Code and

1901.
25, June.

In the matter of Interpleader
Suit No. 6493 of 1901
MILLIE AUGUSTA SARA SHARD, Plaintiff,

RIDOO CHUNDER NUNDY
and others, Defendants.

Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1885), sec.

622—Irregularity—Decree—Trustee—Decree against trustee—Execution against trust property.

This was an application under sec. 622, Civil Procedure Code, to set aside an attachment issued under a decree of the Small Cause Court, dated the 16th January 1901. The applicants were Laura Elizabeth Madden and Millie Augusta Sara Shard and the circumstances under which the application was made are as follows:—Mrs. Madden was the proprietress of the Adelphi Hotel, and prior to her marriage with the Defendant, she executed a deed of settlement rendering the hotel a trust property to be dealt with under the settlement. The trustee originally was a Mr. Brown, and on his retirement the Defendant, Lieutenant Madden, was appointed trustee in his place. The Plaintiffs instituted the present suit in the Small Cause Court for the recovery of the price of goods supplied to the Adelphi Hotel against Lieutenant Madden both in his personal capacity and also as trustee under the deed of settlement, and in their plaint after setting out the execution of the deed of settlement, the Plaintiffs proceeded to state:—"That in the ordinary course of business at the request of the manager for the time being of the business, who was duly authorised by the Defendant on that behalf they supplied and delivered to the hotel on various dates between the months of February and July 1898 and in the months of May and June 1900, miscellaneous stores of the aggregate value of Rs. 794-4-9." They then went on to claim interest and stated that demand had been made for the value of those goods. No appearance was entered on behalf of the Defendant, and on the 16th January 1901 the Registrar passed a default decree in the presence of Mrs. Madden.

Under an arrangement come to between the Plaintiffs and Mrs. Madden, the latter paid to the Plaintiffs Rs. 200 on the date of the decree and agreed to pay the balance of the decree by monthly instalments of Rs. 100. Two months after this decree Lieutenant Madden retired from the trust and Mrs. Shard, one of the present applicants, was appointed trustee in his place.

On the failure of Mrs. Madden to pay two instalments the Plaintiffs applied for execution of their decree and in execution certain billiard tables belonging to the Adelphi Hotel were attached by the Small Cause Court. Mrs. Shard thereupon filed a claim as trustee which was heard before the Chief Judge as an interpleader suit and was dismissed by him with costs. The present applicants thereupon made this application under sec. 622, Civil Procedure Code.

Mr. Sinha (Mr. Bell with him) shewed cause:—Mrs. Madden was not a party either to the original suit or to the claim case. She has no locus standi in this matter and cannot be heard.

The Chief Judge has found that the decree was against Lieutenant Madden as trustee, and the new trustee, Mrs. Shard, was bound by it. There can be no doubt that the decree was against Lieutenant Madden both as trustee and in his personal capacity. Even if the Chief Judge was wrong on that point, that is not a matter that can be dealt with by this Court under sec. 622, Civil Procedure Code. Then Mrs. Shard was not entitled to file a claim. She is in the same position as Lieutenant Madden having succeeded him as trustee, and a representative of a judgment-debtor cannot file a claim with regard to any property attached.

Mrs. Madden appeared in person to support the rule.—The property attached is trust property and cannot be attached in execution of this decree. The decree was against Lieutenant Madden personally. This Court, as a Court of Equity, would attempt to uphold the intentions of the settlor as regards the trust. It was never her intention that the business should be swallowed up by her creditors. They can recover their money, if due, from the trustee, and the trustee would be entitled to recover it from the estate, unless something was due to the estate from him. That cannot be decided in this suit. As to her position the Court would add her as a party now. The case of Johnson (15 Ch. D. 555) is in my favour.

Held.—That technically Mrs. Madden has no locus standi in these proceedings, but that does not prevent the Court from disposing of this application on its merits, since Mrs. Shard has a right to bring the matters stated in her petition before this Court, and to ask for an order thereon. This does not mean that Mrs. Shard has any better right to make the present application than the judgment-debtor himself would have had, if he had continued to be the trustee.

That no decree could under the circumstances have been made against the judgment-debtor other than a personal decree.

That under the circumstances of this case, before a decree can be obtained which could be executed against the trust property, it would have to be shewn, first, that the trust property under the terms of the settlement was devoted to the purposes of the business of a hotel; and, secondly, that the circumstances were such that the Defendant as trustee would be entitled to be indemnified by the trust property to the extent of the claim and that the Plaintiffs as creditors of the hotel business were entitled to stand in the shoes of the trustee in respect of the indemnity and to be recouped out of the trust estate.

The more fact that the trustee, in carrying on the business of a trust, had rendered himself personally responsible for the business debts would of itself give creditors a right to proceed against the trust property. See Strickland v. Symons (L. R. 26 Ch. D. 217); In re Johnson, Shearman v. Robinson (L. R. 15 Ch. D. 548); Roybould v. Turner (L. R. [1900] 1 Ch. 199) referred to.

That the trust properties could not be attached in execution of the decree and the attachment of the trust property was an irregularity of procedure which would come under sec. 622, Civil Procedure Code.

In the goods of ARADHON&Y
DONSEE, deceased.

Succession duty when payable—Court-fees Act (VII of 1870, as amended by Act XI of 1899), sec. 19 (1).

The deceased who was governed by the Bengal School of Hindu Law died on the 1st day of July 1897 intestate leaving her surviving 4 sons and 2 daughters and certain Government promissory notes which were given to her by her sons at the time of the partition and division of the moveable properties amongst themselves to be held and enjoyed by her as a Hindu mother.

Since her death two of her sons and one daughter died. The application was made by the eldest son with consent of the representatives of one of the deceased sons for grant of letters of administration to him, the other surviving son and the widow of the other, deceased son refusing either to join in the application or to consent thereto though requested so to do.

Babu Peari Lal Halder for the applicant submitted that as he apprehends opposition to the application for grant of the letters of administration to his client from the parties who have refused to join, he would at the first instance ask for citation to be issued on them. He further submitted that inasmuch as he does not at the first instance ask for grant of letters of administration the payment of the succession duty which is payable under sec. 19 (1) of the amended Court-fees Act before any order for grant can be made may be delayed till the time comes for making the actual order for such grant.

Held—That the citation do issue to the parties who refused to join and that the payment of the stamp duty be delayed till the time comes for making the order for grant of letters of administration.

The duty is payable before the order for grant of probate or letters of administration can be made, but not necessarily payable at the time of the application for such grant.

KEDAR NATH CHATTERJEE,

Appellant,

v.

THE KING-EMPEROR, Respondent.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), secs. 24, 25, 467.

471 - Forgery—Using a forged document knowing it to be forged—"Fraudulently" and "dishonestly," meaning of—"False document"—Suit upon a bond for enforcement of payment—Absence of intention to cause wrongful loss if any defence—Intention to deceive.

This was an appeal preferred against an order of the Sessions Judge of Birbhum, convicting the Appellant Kedar Nath Chatterjee of the offence of using as genuine a forged document knowing it to be forged under sec. 471 read with sec. 467 of the Penal Code and sentencing him to two years' rigorous imprisonment.

The facts of the case were shortly as follows:—One Ram Chandra Mukherjee executed in favour of Mohesh Chandra Banerjee a mortgage bond on the 9th of Falgun 1290. A suit was brought upon this document by the Appellant Kedar Nath Chatterjee against the heirs of Ram Chandra Mukherjee, he being then dead, upon the ground that he was the beneficial holder of the bond, Mohesh Chandra Banerjee being only his benumdar. It was, however, found, in the course of the trial of that case, that the bond produced was not the true document executed by Ram Chandra, but rather a forgery, and accordingly that suit was dismissed. The Appellant was thereupon indicted for the offence of using as genuine a forged document, knowing it to be forged. It was conceded on all hands that Ram Chandra Mukherjee executed on the 9th Falgun 1290 a mortgage bond of Rs. 199, but the question raised was whether the document that was produced by or on behalf of Kedar Nath Chatterjee in the suit instituted by him for the enforcement of the said bond was the true document. The document that was produced purported to be an exact fac simile of the original mortgage deed, with all the endorsements of registration on the back thereof, as also the seal of the Registrar. But there was internal evidence afforded by the document itself or rather by the endorsements appearing on the back of it that it could not be the true document which was executed by Ram Chandra Mukherjee and subsequently registered before the Sub-Registrar of deeds; and there was evidence to show that the document in question was a forgery. The case for prosecution was that the original document executed by Ram Chandra Mukherjee was paid up and discharged and the document then torn up into two pieces, and that the Appellant Kedar Nath Chatterjee having managed through some of his people to get hold of this torn document, prepared the document in question by forging the writings and the endorsements therein.

The Sessions Judge was unable to hold upon the evidence such as it was adduced on behalf of the prosecution that the case, set up by them that the original document was paid up and discharged, was satisfactorily proved.

In appeal it was contended on behalf of the Appellant that upon the finding of the Sessions Judge it must be taken that the money covered by the mortgage bond was due to Kedar Nath Chatterjee, and therefore the document produced by him, though it might be a forgery, could not be regarded as a "false document" within the meaning of sec. 466, I. P. Code, and that therefore the Appellant could not be held guilty of fraudulently or dishonestly uttering a forged document.

Held—That the intention to cause wrongful loss to another and a deception, actual or intended, are not the necessary ingredients of the intent to defraud.

That there is a real distinction between the meaning of the terms "fraudulently" and "dishonestly."

That the word "fraudulently" denotes an intention to deceive.

That though the act of the Appellant in producing a forged bond in the suit that he brought was not proved to be dishonest within the meaning of sec. 21 of the Penal Code, yet it was fraudulent, inasmuch as it was done with the intent to commit a fraud upon the Court, viz., to make that Court believe that he was entitled to recover money upon the basis of the particular document then produced.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act I of 1898), secs. 145, 526, 435, 439—Charter Act (24 and 25 Vict., Ch. 104)—Letters Patent, sec. 29—Case under sec. 145, Criminal Procedure Code, transfer of—High Court, power of, to transfer such cases—"Case" and "criminal case," meaning of, as used in the Code—Whether co-extensive and interchangeable—Reasonable apprehension of bias in the officer trying a case—Expediency of transfer—Absence of real bias—Inconvenience to parties or witnesses—Previous law.

This was a rule on the District Magistrate of Maldah to shew cause why the case under sec. 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code, pending in the file of the said District Magistrate, should not be transferred to Rajshahi or some other district.

In the present case this rule was obtained for the transfer of a case pending before the District Magistrate of Maldah on the ground of the Magistrate having used certain words and expressions in the course of the investigation to the agent of the Petitioner, Lalit Mohan Moitra, calculated to create in his mind a reasonable apprehension that justice might not be done to him. It was alleged in the affidavits filed in this Court as also in a petition put in before the Magistrate on the 10th May 1901 that such words were in fact used by the Magistrate and further that the witnesses to be examined in the case on either side were witnesses who would come from near the property, the subject-matter of the dispute, and the means of communication between that part of the district of Maldah and the town were generally the same as between it and Rajshahi.

At the hearing of the rule, the District Magistrate submitted through a Deputy Magistrate an explanation in which among other matters he raised the question whether under sec. 526 of the Code of Criminal Procedure the High Court had power to transfer a case under sec. 145 of the Code to some other Magistrate. He relied upon the case of Pandurang Gobind Priyari (I. L. R. 24 Bom. 179).

The Advocate-General (Mr. J. T. Woodroffe) appeared on behalf of the opposite party, and raised the same question, and also contended that in the circumstances of the case it was not expedient to transfer the proceedings from Maldah to some other Magistracy.

Mr. Jackson for the Petitioner argued that the decision in I. L. R. 24 Bom. 179 was erroneously decided and that there was no warrant for the view taken by the Chief Justice of Bombay. He further contended that the High Court had power both under sec. 526, Criminal Procedure Code, as also under the Charter Act to order a transfer of cases under sec. 145, Criminal Procedure Code, which are undoubtedly criminal cases. He also urged that cases under secs. 107, 110, Criminal Procedure Code, were constantly transferred. The present case was, on the merits, a fit one which should be transferred.

Held (by GHOSE, J.)—That an investigation in a case under sec. 145 of the Code of Criminal Procedure is an "enquiry" within the meaning of sec. 4, cl. (k): Satia Chunder Pande v. Rajendra Nath Bagchi (I. L. R. 22 Cal. 198).

That the expression "criminal case" used in sec. 526 of the Code does not necessarily refer to some offence committed.

That proceedings under sec. 145 of the Code partake of the character of and may be described as criminal cases.

That the expression "criminal case," occurring in sec. 526, may be distinguished from a civil case, and that a criminal case is one over which a Criminal Court exercises jurisdiction.

That it is doubtful whether the Legislature meant to confer on the High Court the power by sec. 526 of the Code, of making a transfer of a case other than those in which a person is charged with an offence.

That the High Court has the power to make an order of transfer of a case under sec. 145 of the Code, which a Magistrate has taken cognizance of, under its general powers of superintendence under sec. 15 of the Charter Act.

That if by reason of the words or conduct of a Magistrate or Judge before whom a case is pending, any party reasonably apprehends that there is a bias against him in the mind of the officer concerned, it would be expedient for the ends of justice to transfer the case from his file to that of some other officer competent to try it, though there may not be any actual bias, Queen-Empress v. Bhairab Chunder Chuckerbatty (2 C. W. N. 65 : s. c. I. L. R. 25 Cal. 727) ; Dupeyron v. Driver (I. L. R. 23 Cal. 495).

That a transfer in this case was expedient for the ends of justice, and that the transfer would not cause any real hardship to any of the parties concerned or to their witnesses.

Held (by TAYLOR, J.)—That the two expressions “cases” and “criminal cases” are not, in the Code of Criminal Procedure, co extensive, and that the phrases are not used indiscriminately or interchangeably.

That the phrase “criminal case” is intended to be used in a limited sense and not to apply to every case cognizable by a Criminal Court.

That it is doubtful whether the High Court has the power under sec. 526 of the Code to transfer cases which do not relate to matters which may strictly be described as “criminal,” as relating to a crime or offence under the law.

That the High Court has such power under sec. 29 of the Letters Patent, where the expression “criminal case” appears without the distinction which apparently exists in the Code of Criminal Procedure in respect of cases tried by a Criminal Court as opposed to civil cases.

Mr. Jackson, with him Babu Sarat Chandra Khan, for the Petitioner.

The Advocate-General (Mr. J. T. Woodroffe), with him Babus Dwarka Nath Chuckerbatty and Joy Gopal Ghosha, for the Opposite Party.

Rule made absolute : Transfer ordered.

[CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION].

APPEAL FROM ORIGINAL ORDER.

No. 181 of 1899.

MACLEAN, C. J.

BANERJEE, J.
1900.

RAJ NARAIN MOOKERJEE, Petitioner, Appellant,

Heard, 9, April.
1901.

PHUL KUMARI DEBI,
Opposite Party, Respondent.

Judgment, 8, July.

Administration bond—Surety—Mal-administration —Discharge of surety—Probate and Administration Act (V of 1881), sec. 78 Indian Contract Act (IX of 1872), sec. 130.

This was an appeal against an order of B. L. Gupta, Esq., District Judge of Hughli, dated the 29th March 1899, dismissing the Petitioner's application for leave to withdraw from a surety bond executed under sec. 78 of Act V of 1881.

Phul Kumari Debi, the Opposite Party, took out letters of administration to the estate of her mother Nistarini Debi, deceased, in 1895. On the 29th May 1895 the Petitioner, Raj Narain Mukerjee, who was the brother of Phul Kumari, executed a surety bond under sec. 78 of the Probate and Administration Act. On the 25th of February 1899 Raj Narain made an application to the District Judge of Hughli by whom the letters of administration had been granted, alleging that the administratrix was wilfully wasting the estate and praying that the bond might be cancelled and he might be relieved from all future liability thereunder. The District Judge did not enquire into the charge of mal-administration but summarily rejected the application on the ground that there was no statutory provision to justify such an application, and that a person who had executed a surety bond under sec. 78 of Act V of 1881, must continue liable till the whole estate was administered.

The Petitioner appealed to the High Court, and on the 9th April 1900 their Lordships remanded the case for investigation into the charges of mal-administration. On the 16th August 1900 the District Judge found on the evidence that the charge of wilful mal-administration was fully established. This finding was sent up to the High Court, and no objection was taken to its correctness by either party. The case was then argued upon the point whether or not the Petitioner was entitled to withdraw from the surety bond.

Held—That when upon grant of letters of administration a surety has executed a bond under sec. 78 of Act V of 1881, he is entitled at any time to withdraw, upon proof that the administratrix is mal-administering the estate.

That sec. 130 of the Indian Contract Act is applicable to the case of a surety bond executed under sec. 78 of Act V of 1891.

That sec. 78 of Act V of 1881 is not limited in its operation to the execution of a surety bond when the letters are first granted, but is also applicable if during the continuance of the letters, the bond becomes inoperative by reason of the death of the surety or its cancellation from some other cause.

Burgess v. Eue (L. R. 13 Eq. Ca. 450), Baisoin v. Chokshi (I. L. R. 19 Bom. 245) referred to.

Dr. Ashutosh Mukerjee and Babus Jnanendra Nath Bose and Biraj Mohun Mozumdar for the Appellant.

Babu Saroda Churn Mitter and Babu Benode Behari Mukerjee for the Respondent.

Appeal allowed.

REPORTS (See Index.)

THE BAR ENTERTAINED MR. JUSTICE STANLEY TO a farewell dinner at the Saturday Club on Saturday, the 20th of July last. This is a rare honour and it testifies to the popularity of the judge with the Bar.

WE ARE GLAD TO FIND THAT THE HON'BLE THE Chief Justice has taken note of the complaint of the profession to which we gave expression, namely, that there should not be a fixed body of examiners for the admission of attorneys. This is the first time after years that a departure has been made in this respect and some fresh blood introduced into the old body. The new examiners are Mr. St. John Stephen and Mr. J. G. Woodroffe in place of Mr. Miller and Mr. Allen respectively, now absent from India, and Mr. H. C. Eggar, in place of Mr. Stokoe, who has resigned. Mr. W. R. Fink, the Registrar, and Babu Gonesh Chunder Chunder will continue to act as examiners.

WE DEEPLY REGRET TO RECORD THE PREMATURE death of Mr. Manik Lal Dutt, B. Sc., Bar-at-Law. He was a distinguished scholar both of the Calcutta and the London Universities. It is a great pity that this country does not offer any opportunities for young men with more than ordinary scientific attainments, and naturally the Bar is fast becoming the burial ground of a large number of promising young men of this country. Mr. Dutt's first struggles had long been over and he was getting a fair amount of work, but his career would surely have been one of much greater usefulness if he had been given early opportunities to toil in a laboratory and had not to fall back on the Bar for a living. He leaves a widow and a child to whom we convey our sincerest condolence.

IT IS ALWAYS REFRESHING TO GO THROUGH THE PAGES of the Journal of the Society of Comparative Legislation. The June number, which is the first of the new series for 1901, maintains the scientific spirit and also the high standard on which the journal is conducted. Minds steeped in legal technicalities will often find relief in going through its pages where laws are viewed on the broad basis of general principles and are considered with special reference to their service or disservice to mankind. Researches in criminal law continue to find place in its pages, and the laws and legislation of India engage no mean share of its attention.

MR. CRACKANTHORPE'S ADDRESS ON CRIME AND Punishment from a Comparative Point of View, delivered before the Society in February last and noticed by us at the time, is now published in the pages of the Society's Journal. His prefatory sketch tracing the changes in the ideas of crime and punishment and its effect on the treatment of youthful offenders, forms by far the more interesting portion of the address. The rest of it, which contrasts the effects of previous convictions on punishment under different systems of law and deals with other miscellaneous matters, though not treated in the same systematic manner, yet makes out a sufficiently strong case for the necessity of an International Commission for arriving at some common principles of punishment.

CRIME AND PUNISHMENT.

The primitive idea of punishment in European jurisprudence was revenge. The person wronged had the right of avenging the wrongs with the assistance of the State. Fitz James Stephen referring to this stage of English jurisprudence says: "Crimes were regarded as private wrongs, revenged rather than punished by those who were injured by them, first by private war, afterwards by summary execution, and then by a public demonstration of justice, slowly organized in such a way as to bear many traces of a rough system."

When society was sufficiently organised and law and order fairly established, crime ceased to be regarded as a matter of mere personal concern and became a matter of greater concern to the State as well. The practice of avenging private wrongs was neither conducive to public peace nor to public morals, and in the interest of both it was considered preferable that the State should punish criminals instead. Criminals are always a source of danger and are often a standing menace to society and in their repression lay the protection of community. Punishment thus in course of time came to be regarded more in the defensive light than in the offensive. Marquese Beccaria of Milan in his famous work published in 1770 propounded that the only true measure of crime was the damage done to the community. Although by this time punishment had shifted its centre from the standpoint of personal retribution to that of social defence, yet it displayed little consideration for the criminal concerned. Beccaria maintained that the intention of the accused was of no moment, the result of his act was all in all. Or in other words crime was regarded by him only in the objective light. Beccaria's theory ruled the civilized world up till late. Bentham was influenced by it and it may be doubted whether even Fitz James Stephen ever recovered from its effects. According to the latter "the Criminal Law proceeds upon the principle that it is morally right to hate criminals, and it confirms and justifies the sentiment by inflicting punishment which express it." This point of view he regards as "healthy, natural and deserving of encouragement." Needless to say that this displays little pity for the criminal himself.

But contemporaneously with this writer, scientific knowledge and philosophical thought were fast superseding historic method of reasoning and viewed in this new light crime and punishment appealed to the human mind in altogether a new aspect. Pellegrino Rossi's reformation theory had by this time almost superseded Beccaria's theory of social defence.

Social defence, according to Rossi, was but a secondary consideration, the primary being restoration of public order and the reformation of the criminal. The difference between the two schools chiefly consists in the fact that the former regarded crime merely in the objective light and the latter in the subjective light as well.

The French Code, which was influenced by the former, views each crime as such and even attempts to commit crime are treated in it with the same rigour as the crimes themselves, and accessories are punished as if they were principals. The Belgian Code which has been more influenced by the latter, makes a distinction in each case, and makes every allowance for extenuating circumstances all round.

A still later development in the subjective view of crime must be ascribed to the influence of the evolution theory.

MM. Tarde and Lecassagne in France, M. Prinz in Belgium, M. Fornitzki in Russia are the Chief exponents of a school who maintain that a criminal is a complex product of the propensities he has inherited and the atmosphere in which he has been brought up. They, therefore, contend for a limited responsibility, which lies half-way between plenary free-will and complete mental alienation.

A still later development are the theories of the Italian Schools headed by Lombrose and Garofalo. The former is an anthropologist who lays principal stress on the physiological peculiarities of the criminal, while the latter insists more on the influence of social factors of life.

In Germany crime and its causes form a separate department of study of which Professor List of the Berlin University is the chief exponent. In France a society after which the English Society of Comparative Legislation takes its name is doing like its sister institution in England most valuable work in this direction.

With the advancement of knowledge about crime and criminals the idea is gaining ground throughout the civilized world that, perhaps, the educative method is likely to do more lasting good than the purely punitive.

SOME FACTS ABOUT THE KING'S CORONATION.

Whenever Edward is crowned it will be the duty of Frank Seaman Dymoke, hereditary king's champion, to step forward, duly equipped, to challenge all who are bold enough to deny the king to be the lawful sovereign. The office of king's champion dates back to the coronation of William the Conqueror, who conferred upon Lord Marmion, of Fontenoy and Marmion, the title of king's champion, and with it the manor and barony of Scirevelby, in Lincolnshire. The house and lands were held by "barony and grand serjeantry," the terms of the tenure requiring that at the coronation "the lord of the manor, or some person in his name, if he be not able, shall come well armed for war, upon a good war-horse, into the presence of our lord the king, and shall then and there cause it to be proclaimed that if any one shall say that our lord and king has no right to his crown or kingdom, he will be ready and prepared to defend with his body the right of the king and kingdom against him, and all others whatsoever." The title of king's champion descended in direct line from the lords of Fontenoy until the reign of Henry IV., and then through the failure of heirs male the championship passed into the Ludlow family by the marriage of one of Marmion's daughters with Sir Thomas de Ludlow, whose granddaughter married Sir John Dymoke, in the reign of Edward III. The title and manor has remained in the Dymoke family to the present day.

Though the champion has not publicly entered Westminster Hall to make his challenge, since, the coronation of George IV., he was ready within the precincts of the hall, at the coronation of William IV. and Victoria, in case he should be called on to fulfil the terms of his tenure. In both cases he had his white horse saddled and his armor ready to don at an instant's notice.

When the coronation of George IV. took place in Westminster Abbey, the ill-used Queen Caroline attempted to force an entrance into the Abbey to interrupt the ceremony; she reached the door leading to the cloisters, but found it locked.

She knocked on it for some time but finally had to retire. More than one influential Englishman asked permission to challenge the King's right to be crowned without the Queen, but she declined to allow the sacrifice, for it would have meant imprisonment or death to the challenger.

Many changes have been made in the title of the sovereign of England as the centuries passed. In the days of the Heptarchy was first heard the title "Rex gentis Anglorum," but the style King of England was first used by Egbert in 828. King John, at the end of the twelfth century, was the first to use the pronoun "we" in his communications with his subjects. The monarch is still designated "Defender of the Faith," a title conferred by Pope Leo X upon Henry VIII, in recognition of a theological polemic against Luther which the much-married king had written. When Henry renounced Romanism and declared that the Pope had no power or jurisdiction over him, Pope Paul III, revoked the permission to use the title, but the King, much annoyed, caused an act of Parliament to be passed (35 Henry VIII., cap. 3), which annexed to the Crown of England for ever the style of "Supreme Head of the Church" and "Defender of the Faith."

The best authorities, such as the "Encyclopædia Britannica," state that it is under the above-mentioned act that the title of Fidei Defensor has ever since been used, but that statement cannot be correct, for the 1 and 2 Philip and Mary, cap. viii., sec. 20, repealed the entire act of King Henry in the following emphatic words:

"Act for the ratification of the King's Majesty's style shall henceforth be repealed, frustrate, void, and of none effect."

The title of Fidei Defensor has never been revived in any English Act of Parliament, and must, therefore, still depend for its right to be used on the Pope's bestowal. When Mary came to the throne, Cardinal Pole was sent as Papal Nuncio, and in pronouncing the absolution over the kneeling King, Queen and entire Parliament, he removed, in the Pope's name, all "censures, judgments and pains," and it was soon evident that it was held the Pope's bar to the title was one of the censures removed. It was customary in those times to print the whole of the acts of a session in one continuous roll, and preface them with the full style and title of the King. In the preface to the acts of the very session in which the act of King Henry was repealed, the title cropped up, and in the preface to the acts of the second session the full titles of the monarch are set forth in these words:

"Acts made at a Parliament begun and holden at Westminster the one and twentieth day of October, in the 2 and 3 year of the reign of our most Gracious Sovereign Lord and Lady, Philip and Mary, by the Grace of God King and Queen of England, France, Naples, Jerusalem and Ireland; Defenders of the Faith; Princes of Spain and Sicily," etc.

It was Henry VIII. who first adopted the title King of Ireland instead of "Lord." It was not until the union of England and Scotland in the reign of Queen Anne that "Great Britain" came into use. When the act of union was passed and Ireland lost its legislative independence, it was ordered that the royal title should be: "Georgius Tertius, Dei Gratia, Britanniarum Rex, Fidei Defensor." This was the first time the long-prized title, "King of France," had been dropped, and this was only one hundred years ago (1801). On the 21st of January, 1837, Hanover was dropped from the Queen's style when she came to the throne, no woman, according to the Constitution of that country, being eligible to reign. Another change was made in 1876 when Queen Victoria was proclaimed Empress of India.

Certain isles and even towns still have the right to be mentioned in any proclamation which requires the king's signature, though this has not been insisted on except on very rare occasions. The proclamation of King Edward VII., "requiring all persons being in office or authority" to continue in the execution of their duties, specifies as the places to which this shall refer as: "Our United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, Dominion of Wales, Town of Berwick-upon Tweed, Isles of Jersey, Guernsey, Alderney, Sark or Man, or any of Our Foreign Possessions, or Colonies, or Our Empire of India."

The oath which the new king will have to take on his coronation is the one prescribed by statute (1 Will. and Mary, st. 1, c. 6.) with a slight modification on account of the disestablishment of the High Church. It had been found that prior kings had tampered with the oath, and there is in existence a copy of the oath sworn to by Henry VIII., interlined and altered with his own hand. To prevent any such changes in future the wording of the oath was established by statute.

He will take his place in a chair before and below the throne. Then the Archbishop of Canterbury, accompanied by the high officers of the State, presents him to the people to receive their homage, which is rendered by the boys of Westminster School. This is called "the recognition." Then follows the oblation of gifts on the altar; then the Litany is chanted, and the Communion office commenced. After the Nicene Creed the coronation oaths are taken.

The Archbishop of Canterbury will demand:

"Sir, is your majesty willing to take the oath?" To which Edward will reply: "I am willing." Then the Archbishop will put these questions, a printed copy of which, together with the necessary responses, will have been given to the king:

"Will you solemnly promise and swear to govern the people of this United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, and the dominions thereto belonging, according to the statutes in Parliament agreed on, and the respective laws and customs of the same?"

The King: "I solemnly promise so to do."

"Will you, to your power, cause law and justice, in mercy, to be executed in all your judgments?"

"I will."

"Will you, to the utmost of your power, maintain the laws of God, the true profession of the gospel and the Protestant reformed religion, established by law? And will you maintain and preserve inviolably the settlement of the united church of England and Ireland, and the doctrine, worship, discipline and government thereof, as by law established within England and Ireland, and the territories thereunto belonging? And will you preserve to the bishops and clergy of England and Ireland, and to the churches there committed to their charge, all such rights and privileges as do, or shall appertain unto them, or any of them?"

"All this I promise to do."

The king then goes to the altar, and laying his hands upon the Gospels, takes the following oath:

"The things which I have heretofore promised, I will perform and keep, so help me God."

The king then kisses the book and signs the oath.

After the taking of the oaths comes the anointing and the vesting of sovereign with the Episcopal insignia, the alb, the stole and the pallium. The stole is the insignia of priesthood; only an Archbishop, or spiritual head of the church, can wear the pallium.

The spurs, sword of state, and the sceptre are next presented. The coronation follows and then the enthronement and homage. Lastly the Communion Office is completed. Should Alexandra be crowned queen consort she will be anointed, crowned and enthroned immediately after the king's enthronization is completed, and she will be conducted to her own throne on the king's left hand, the royal pair receiving the sacramental bread and wine together.

The coronation takes place in the Chapel of Edward the Confessor, Westminster Abbey, the king sitting on the original coronation chair, the queen consort on that made for the coronation of William and Mary.

The coronation chair has been in use for centuries. In the seat of the chair is the "stone of destiny" upon which the kings of Scotland were crowned since the beginning of the sixth century, and prior to which time it had been in use for the same purpose in Ireland for at least a thousand years, and as many claim, from the time it was taken into Ireland from Bethel, where it had been set up by Jacob for a pillar. (Genesis xxviii, 18.) The history of the "stone of destiny" can be traced back clearly for two thousand years.

After his coronation the King is entitled to many privileges and perquisites, one of which is the right to the head of every whale caught on the coast of his kingdom. The tail goes to Queen Alexandra, the object of the division being to guarantee that the Queen's wardrobe shall be furnished with whalebone. The King is entitled to every sturgeon brought to land in the United Kingdom; a law which is evaded by astute fishermen taking the sturgeons to some foreign port and reshipping them to England. At the coronation and every anniversary thereafter the King is entitled to receive from divers persons a tablecloth, worth three shillings; two white doves, two white hares, a catapult, a pound of cummin seed, a horse and halter, a pair of scutelet horse, a curry-comb, a coat of gray fur, a nightcap, a falcon, two knives, a lance, worth two shillings, and from his tailor a silver needle.

When Henry VI. returned from the coronation in France, at the conduit in Cheap were formed "several wells—the Well of Mercie, the Well of Grace, and the Well of Pitee—and at each well a ladie, standing, administered the waters to all who asked, and these waters were found to be wine. About these wells were set various trees in full leaf and fruit, all hevvilie laden with oranges, almonds, pomegranates, olives, lemons, dates, quinces, blanderells, peaches, costards, wardenes and plums."

When Edward VI. was crowned he had to stop the procession for a considerable time to watch the antics of a foreign rope dancer whose rope was stretched from St. Paul's steeple downward to a great anchor near the gate of the Dean's house. The dancer came down the rope from the top of St. Paul's headformost, kissed the king's foot and then ran up again and turned somersaults and danced and performed for the space of half an hour.

When Queen Mary passed through the city for her coronation the Lord Mayor had engaged a Dutchman to stand on the weathervane on the top of St. Paul's steeple, holding in his hand a streamer five yards long, which he waved about. Then he stood on one foot on the weathervane and afterwards knelt down on it. The city paid him for this performance the sum of £16 13s. 4d.

At the coronation of Edward VII. it is not likely that ropewalkers or acrobats will be engaged by the City, but there is no doubt that brilliant illuminations and plenty of bunting will testify to the fact that though the queen may be mourned, a live king is of more advantage to trade than a dead queen. The queen is dead! Long live the king!—Green Flag.

English Notes.

PROBATE AND DIVORCE DIVISION.—VALENTINE v. VALENTINE. Before the PRESIDENT 7th June 1901.

Examination on commission of witnesses abroad before service of citation in the cause.—Costs.

This was an application on behalf of the wife as an urgent one for the issue of a commission to examine certain witnesses in Canada.

The applicant was not aware whether the suit was going to be defended by the husband. The ground of the application was that the witnesses were connected with a criminal trial in Toronto; and there were reasons for believing that, if they were not examined at once, they would disappear. Brown v. Brown (33 L. J. P. & M. 203) was relied on.

The learned PRESIDENT granted the application at the wife's expense, remarking that at that stage he could not make the husband liable for such expenses and reserving all questions regarding the admissibility of such evidence when the trial came on and also costs of the matter.

KING'S BENCH DIVISION.—THORNE v. CASSON. Before Mr. JUSTICE CHANNELL. 25th April 1901.

Husband and wife—Dressmaker's bills—Husband's liability.

The dressmaker Mrs. Thorne (trading at Brighton under the name Lucie Amott) sued Casson for price of costumes supplied to "Mrs. Casson" amounting to over £85. He was not married to "Mrs. Casson." Her case was that he had held "Mrs. Casson" out as having authority to pledge his credit; Mr. Casson denied that such was the fact and per contra alleged that he had made a sufficient allowance for dress to the lady in question and had forbidden her to pledge his credit.

The learned Judge observed in his summing up to the jury that the fact that the lady in question was not married to Mr. Casson did not alter the question of his liability. The case must be considered in the same light as if she were his wife. In the matter of dresses an arrangement was often made by the husband giving the wife an allowance and forbidding her to pledge his credit, and such arrangement had been recognized and given effect to by Courts of Justice; it did not matter whether he paid her the allowance, regularly or not. In the case of dealings with butchers, bakers and such tradespeople, that practice was not unusual with husbands; and where claims were made by such parties, the husband could not successfully resist the claim on the same ground. Further in the case of dressmakers the fact that ignorance was pleaded by Plaintiff regarding the directions given by the husband to the wife would be of no avail. It was settled law that in such case the husband could only be made responsible for his wife's acts in ordering goods in the same way that he could be made liable for the acts of any other agent under the ordinary agency law. Then there was still a further consideration and that was whether notwithstanding the directions not to pledge his credit, had the husband done anything to make the Plaintiff suppose that he was allowing his wife to pledge his credit, if so he would be liable. The jury should consider whether notwithstanding his injunctions not to pledge his credit he had so behaved himself as to entitle Plaintiff to believe that he had authorized the lady to pledge his credit.

The learned Judge commented on the evidence and jury found for Plaintiff. Stay of execution was granted.

Mr. Rose Innes for the Plaintiff.

Mr. German for the Defendant.

[APPEAL FROM THE CALCUTTA HIGH COURT.]

LORD HOBHOUSE. DEBI PRASAD CHOWDHURY,

LORD DAVEY. Plaintiff, Appellant,

LORD ROBERTSON, " "

SIR R. COUCH. RANI RADHA CHOWDHURAI

1901. and others, Defendants,

27, June. Respondents.

Special leave to appeal—Deposit of security.

Petition states that Petitioner instituted this suit at Bhagalpore praying for a declaration that he was the next reversionary heir to one Shib Nag Chandi, the deceased husband of the first Respondent abovenamed, and that a certain hebbanmah executed by her in favour of the other Defendants-Respondents would be inoperative as against him after the widow's death.

Sub-Judge decided in Plaintiff's favour. On Defendants' appeal the High Court on 19th February 1900 allowed the appeal and dismissed the suit on the ground that Petitioner had not proved that he was the reversioner.

On the 14th August 1900 certificate was granted that the case was a fit one for appeal to Her Majesty in Council.

On the 27th November 1900 on Petitioner's application, the usual time for making the deposit having expired, the High Court made an order enlarging the time for deposit to on or before the 1st December.

Petitioner being poor, and after several unsuccessful attempts, he succeeded in making arrangements for a loan from one Babu Badan Chand, and on 1st December Babu Tarini Prosunno Das, the son of Badan Chand, went to the office of the High Court with a vakil named Babu Lakshmi Narain Singh, and there produced before the Deputy Registrar the necessary sums of money and stated that he was ready to pay it over as soon as his father could procure a proper assurance from Petitioner, and an affidavit was presented same day of Tarini Prosunno Das supporting above facts, and a petition praying the Court that a further delay of one week from 1th December might be granted to perfect the security. That application was refused and the leave to appeal was struck off.

Petition stated that Petitioner had now made arrangements with one Babu Udit Narain Singh and Ram Bahadur Singh, who were ready to undertake all the expenses of the appeal and to prosecute it effectually and to make such deposits on such terms as His Majesty in Council may direct and prayed for special leave.

After hearing Mr. Mayne for Petitioner their Lordships granted leave to appeal on the understanding that usual security was deposited here with the Registrar within one month from this date.

Leave granted.

TESTAMENTARY AND INTESTATE JURISDICTION

STANLEY, J.	}	In the goods of LUCHMINARAIN,
1901.		deceased, RAMRICK DAS,
1, July.		" "
		MUSKIT. BEEJEE COOMAR.

Probate action—Receiver, discharge of—Grant of probate—Costs as against the impugnant—Costs occasioned by the appointment of a Receiver.

This was an application for probate of the last Will and testament of the deceased abovenamed, in which a caveat had been filed by his adoptive mother, the abovenamed Defendant and which had been set down as a contentious cause. The case originally set up by the caveatrix was (1) that the Will was a forgery, (2) that the testator was not, at the time the Will was said to have been executed, physically and mentally capable of executing the Will, and (3) that the Will was executed, if at all, under undue influence. The last plea was, however, withdrawn at the time of hearing. The case was heard at great length and the hearing lasted for 33 working days. To-day his Lordship delivered judgment by which he found that the Will was a genuine document, and that the testator was at the time physically and mentally capable of making a Will. He accordingly discharged the caveat and granted probate of the Will.

The Advocate-General (Hon'ble J. T. Woodroffe) and Messrs. Jackson, Palit, O'Keefe, Garth, A. Chaudhuri, Sinha, S. R. Das, K. Chawdhuri, and S. K. Mullick for the Executor.

Messrs. W. C. Bonnerjee, R. Mitra, J. G. Woodroffe, Knight and Shelley Bonnerjee for the Caveatrix.

The Advocate-General.—I submit we are entitled to the costs of this suit. I also ask that the Receiver be discharged.

Mr. Mitra.—There must be a substantive application for that.

The Advocate-General.—I am entitled to apply now and to ask that the Receiver be discharged by the same order by which probate is granted to me. See Kerr on Receivers (4th Ed.), p. 30, where it is said "after the litigation is over in the Probate Court, the practice is to discharge the Receiver and dispose of the costs: and if it appear that there was no reasonable ground for instituting the action at all, the Court will order the Plaintiff to pay all the costs, though a Receiver has been appointed." In Barton v. Rock (22 Beav. 376), it was laid down that the practice of the Court was, upon the grant of probate, to discharge the Receiver, stay all proceedings in the suit and dispose of the costs. The same practice has been followed in this Court. [STANLEY, J.—The order that you might be entitled to is that upon probate being taken out the Receiver be discharged.] The order that was made by Sale, J., in Nergie v. Nergie (unreported) was that the probate was to be granted but not to be issued until the provisions of the Court Fees Act be complied with and the Receiver was ordered to be and was thereby discharged. I ask for a similar order. [STANLEY, J.—I am entirely with you on that point. Now that I have found that the Will is genuine, I do not think the Receiver should hold the assets any longer.] As to costs, where the next-of-kin exercises his right to put an executor on proof of his Will vexatiously or makes charges which they were not justified by the evidence in doing, they are liable to be condemned in costs, see Coot's Probate Practice (4th Ed.), p. 266 and (11th Ed.), p. 504. In this case the caveatrix had made charges of forgery and undue influence, and under those circumstances the Court will always condemn them in costs. See Bury v. Bullin [2 Moo. P. C. 480 at p. 492 (1838)], Coppin v. Dillon (4 Hag. 375), Constable v. Tuffnell (4 Hag. 508).

In this country, costs are entirely in the discretion of the Court. In In the goods of Annie Black (unreported, Hill, J., 17th April 1895) costs were given against the impugnant. There also his Lordship found that the defence when it was started was vague and without any foundation. Similar order was made in In the goods of Kaminey Dassee, Madhusudan Seal v. Benode Behary, Dutt (unreported, Amcer Ali, J., 1st January 1898). Where that has been the case the successful party has never been mulcted in costs. It is only where the impugnant restricts himself to requiring the Will to be proved in solemn form that no order for costs is made against him. A similar order was made in In the goods of Khas Mehal [5 C. W. N. 505 (1901)]. I also ask that the order for costs should carry with it all the costs and charges of the Receiver pendente lite. See Fisher v. Fisher [L. R. 4 P. D. 231 (1878)], where it was held that in a testamentary suit, condemnation in costs includes all the charges of an administrator pending suit. See also West v. Goodrick [31 L. J., Probate Div. 39 (1861)]. I ask for a direction to the Taxing Officer as to those costs as also for directions under Belchambers' Rules and Orders, p. 382, headings 10, 14 and 16. That was done in Gobind Chunder Dutt v. S. S. Gladstone (unreported, Hill, J., 29th March 1892). A similar order was made in Drachenfels (1 L. R. 27 Cal. 860).

Mr. R. Mitra, contra.—There should be a substantive application for the discharge of the Receiver. The Advocate-General has not been able to refer to a single case where the Receiver has been at once discharged. [STANLEY, J.—I hardly require a case for that.] In this case the application for Receiver was made by the promovent himself, how can he ask for costs of that. [STANLEY, J.—It became necessary by your conduct.] We were entitled to come in and ask the executor to prove the Will in solemn form; then the promovent applied for the appointment of a Receiver; how can they now ask for costs which were incurred at their own instance.

There has never been a case of a Receiver being discharged before probate is taken out.

This is a case in which we are entitled to costs out of the estate. The Court has found that there were suspicious circumstances. This was pre-eminently a case for investigation. The unsuccessful party is entitled to costs out of the estate in a case which from its peculiar circumstances pre-eminently calls for investigation; see Coot's Probate Practice, p. 502, and the cases cited there. Under the circumstances of this case as found by the Court the mother was justified in appearing. See Zeenah Begum's case (unreported, Stanley, J., 17th May 1899) and In the goods of Gooroo Churn Ghose (unreported.) As to directions under headings 10, 14 and 16 of Belchambers' Rules and Orders there is nothing shewn that they incurred any extra costs for collecting evidence. Who are the witnesses who have been called who were not present at the garden at the time of Luxminarain's death?

The Advocate-General in reply.—The appointment of the Receiver became necessary by reason of their conduct and the estate should not be made to suffer for it.

Held—That the Receiver should out of funds in his hands first pay the duty in respect of the probate and upon the grant of probate he be discharged and pass his accounts. That there were circumstances in this case which justified the Defendant in requiring the Will to be proved in solemn form and if she had contended herself with requiring that and with cross-examining the Plaintiff's witnesses, she would have been entitled to costs out of the estate.

That a great portion of the time occupied by this investigation was due to the charges made against the Plaintiff. Under the circumstances.

Ordered—That the Defendant do pay her own costs and pay to the Plaintiff all costs occasioned to the estate by the appointment of a Receiver and the costs of the last 15 days' hearing and all reserved costs, the costs to be taxed on scale No. 2.

Mr. Mitra.—Do these costs include the Receiver's commission?

THE COURT.—That is a matter for the Taxing Officer.

Mr. N. C. Bose, Attorney for the Promovent.

Messrs. Kally Nath Mitter and Sarbadhicary, Attorneys for the Impugnant.

[ORDINARY ORIGINAL CIVIL JURISDICTION.]

In the matter of sec. 39 of the Presidency Small Cause Court Act, XV of 1882, (as amended by Act I of 1895),
and

HARRINGTON, J.
1901.

8, July.

In the matter of KUCHIL CHANDRA
SARKAR and GOPAL CHUNDER
DEY and another.

The evidence upon which the Court acts in transferring a Small Cause Court suit under sec. 39 of Act XV of 1882, as amended by Act I of 1895, is the ex parte statement of the Defendant—Applications for rescinding or altering such orders.

The Defendant, Gopal Chunder Dey, obtained an ex parte order on the 22nd of March 1901 for transfer to the High Court of the Small Cause Court Suit No. 2797 between the parties abovenamed under the provisions of sec. 39 of the Presidency Small Cause Court Act as amended by Act I of 1895. In his affidavit in support of the application for transfer, the Defendant had stated that he had ample means to satisfy any decree that might be passed against him in the said suit.

As against the order for transfer, the Plaintiff in the above suit applied on notice to the said Defendant, that it might be rescinded, or made conditional upon the Defendant paying into Court the amount of the claim and costs on furnishing sufficient security therefor, and that the costs of and incidental to the application might be dealt with as costs in the cause.

Mr. Sinha, for the Plaintiff, contended that the Defendant had not a bona fide defence to the action and that upon the Plaintiff's affidavits it was apparent that the Defendant had not sufficient means to satisfy the decree which might be made in the suit. He further stated that the Court had rescinded such orders of transfer or made them conditional upon the Defendant finding security, upon good cause shown. Analogy was to be found in the procedure laid down in Chapter XXXIX of the Civil Procedure Code, relating to the summary trial of suits on negotiable instruments.

Mr. A. Chaudhuri, for the Defendant, Gopal Chunder Dey, contended that the Court had already considered the question as to whether there was prima facie a good defence to the action when it made the order for transfer. That is all that the Court can be required to do at this stage of the case, otherwise it would be calling upon the Court to determine the merits of the defence in an interlocutory application. Further, nothing had been alleged in the Plaintiff's affidavits which would have entitled him to ask for security from the Defendant in the Court where the suit had been instituted. The Defendant asserted that he had sufficient means and although the Plaintiff denied the truth of the statement the Court should not be called upon to try that issue. The whole object of the section which provides for ex parte applications would be frustrated if such applications as the present were entertained.

His Lordship Mr. Justice Harrington held, that such applications for rescinding or altering the original ex parte order for transfer should not be encouraged. The section under which the original application had been made for transfer, gave the Defendant the right to apply ex parte. It is an express provision, and the section itself gives the Court power in the first instance to call upon the Defendant to give security for costs. The evidence upon which the Court acts in making the order is the ex parte statement of the Defendant. If it was intended that the decision of the Court should not be on ex parte statements, the section would have so provided. The Defendant having at the time he had made his application for transfer satisfied the Court, it was not now open to the Plaintiff to come into Court to vary the order.

His Lordship refused the Plaintiff's application, and directed that the costs be costs in the suit.

Babu Kalimohan Rakhi, Attorney for the Plaintiff:

Babu Dhwanissar Mitter, Attorney for the Defendant.

Application refused.

REPORTS (See Index.)

WE DRAW ATTENTION TO THE CASE OF P. & O. S. N. Co. v. The King (p. 268, infra) which relates to crew space for lascars on board an English vessel. The decision is not only of great public importance but in so far as it relates to the question of conflict between an Act of Parliament and an Act of the Indian Legislature is also of considerable legal importance.

A LETTER HAS BEEN ADDRESSED TO US ON BEHALF OF the Madras lawyers, which we publish in another column, asking our opinion as to the propriety of a counsel continuing his practice at the Bar, after his appointment to the Bench has been announced. While there is authority in support of the practice of judges reverting to the Bar, we are unable to find any as regards the propriety of a judge-elect continuing his practice at the Bar. Professional opinion here is decidedly against it. Applying to that opinion the test of reason, we agree that a judge-elect ought not to accept any retainer or fresh professional engagements and as regards those in which he had been retained or engaged prior to the public announcement of his appointment, he ought to cancel them so far as practicable by returning the fees that he might have received for them, retaining only such fees for consultation or reading as he might have legitimately earned for work done. But there may be circumstances, as in a part-heard case, where the giving up of a brief by counsel may be a great hardship to the client, and counsel may consider himself under a moral obligation to continue his engagement till the close of the case. If the professional engagements of Sir Bashyam Iyengar are of this nature, he can surely refuse to take his seat before fulfilling them. But in no other case would a judge-elect be justified in postponing the taking of his seat on the Bench on the ground of outstanding professional engagements.

THE FOLLOWING NOTE IN THE PAGES OF THE Journal of the Society of Comparative Legislation on recalcitrant spouse and judicial separation would seem to favour the view of Hindu law as expressed by Ghose and Stevens, JJ., in the case of Mon Mohini v. Basant Kumar (5 C. W. N. 673). The only point of difference lies in the fact that Hindu law recognises the power of the husband to contract a second marriage. But it must be remembered that the policy of the Hindu law as also public opinion amongst Hindus have always been opposed to the contracting of a second marriage, except when there has been a failure of issue by the first wife (Mann IX, 81, 82). Marriage, according to Hindu ideas, is more a spiritual than a social duty, and its central idea is to have male offspring, whose spiritual and meritorious acts can alone confer salvation on the soul of his parents and his ancestors. This being so, there can be no doubt that it would be opposed both to public policy and to the spirit of Hindu law, to encourage either judicial separation or bigamy. The social status of women in the eyes of the law should by all means be raised, but this cannot certainly be achieved by the relaxation of matrimonial ties. The readiness with which orders for judicial separation are made now-a-days, is not certainly conducive either to public morals or to the raising of the standard of self-respect in either man or woman. We therefore welcome the protest that has been raised in this respect by our learned contemporary. Referring to a Montreal case it says:—

Allowing for this inequality, that what is sauce for the goose is not sauce for the gander, the decision seems a sound one. A wife deserting her husband and refusing to return may justly be designated injure grave. It is not only a frustration of all the ends of the matrimonial compact, but it leaves the husband in the situation of being married without any of the amenities of the married state, or the power of contracting a fresh union. It is the peculiar seriousness of this wrong which has led English law to grant that singular anomaly, specific performance of the matrimonial contract in the shape of a decree for restitution of conjugal rights; and though it no longer enforces the decree by imprisoning the contumacious spouse and gives the Court power to order a judicial separation instead, it still in form enjoins such spouse to return to cohabitation and render conjugal amenities. Yet it must be confessed that a judicial separation or a separation de corps is at best an inadequate and very unsatisfactory remedy, and the relations it creates little short of a satire on marriage. The epithet which the President of the Divorce Division chose in a recent case to sum up the situation of the separated spouses was "deplorable"; and the worst is that under the summary matrimonial jurisdiction of Magistrates in England the judicial separation is becoming increasingly common, with a corresponding danger to social morals.

THE PRACTICE IN THE MATTER OF HEARING THIRD COUNSEL on the same side, as discussed in the case of Brij Coomuree v. Ramrick Dass, is modelled on that which obtained in the old Supreme Court, and that in its turn was founded on the practice which prevailed in the Court of Appeal in Chancery. In Hoare v. Bembridge ([1872] 21 (Eng.) W. R. 43), the Solicitor-General, Cotton, Q. C., and Bush appeared for the Appellant. Bush, the third counsel, was about to address the Court, presumably after both his leaders had done so, though that is not expressly stated in the report, when Lord Selborne, L. C., stated that he intended to follow the rule laid down by the Lords Justices, that, there were special circumstances, not more than two counsel would be heard on the same side. In Sneeshy v. The Lancashire and Yorkshire Railway Co ([1875] L. R. 1 Q. B. D. 43 at p. 41) Herschell, Q. C., and Beasley appeared for the Appellant. Beasley, after Herschell's address to the Court, had nothing to add but asked for the direction of the Court as to whether more than one counsel could be heard. In reply Lord Cairns, L. C., said: "The practice must be uniform in this Court, and will be assimilated to the former practice in the Court of Appeal in Chancery, and two counsel will therefore be heard for each side." We are informed that this question, namely, as to whether three counsel are entitled to be heard on the same side, was once raised before Garth, C. J., and it was there decided that a third counsel on the same side is not entitled to be heard, but we are unable to trace the order or the case in which it was made. Further information will be welcome.

PRIVILEGE OF PEERAGE.

From a purely legal point of view, we may regret the plea of guilty entered by Earl Russell at his recent trial before the House of Lords for bigamy. The tribunal included, as a matter of course, all the law lords, and it was hoped that the opportunity might be seized to consider and, if need be, to review the decision in Le Memrier's case (L. R. App. Ca. 517, 1895) with respect to matrimonial domicile, on which the legal validity in England of the Earl's Nevada marriage would depend. The abrupt termination of the proceedings does not deprive them, however, of their extreme constitutional interest.

A peer of the realm is so seldom indicted for felony that it must have come as a novelty to many to learn that he cannot be tried in the same way as an ordinary subject of His Majesty. Up to a certain stage the procedure is identical. The charge is preferred in the ordinary way before a magistrate, and, if the magistrate commits the peer for trial, the committal is to the Central Criminal Court. In that Court, if an indictment for felony is found against him, he is arraigned in a similar fashion to any commoner. But the Statute 7 and 8 Geo. IV, c. 28, sec. 1, which determines the effect of a plea of "not guilty," does not apply to persons having the privilege of peerage: and a peer, although, apparently, under 4 and 5 Vict., c. 22, he must plead in the same way as a commoner, does not "put himself upon the country," and cannot demand a trial by jury. There can be no waiver of the privilege of peerage, which will usually appear to the Court by the description of the accused in the indictment. When Lord Coleridge, L. C. J., in 1887, permitted an Irish peer, Lord Graves, to waive his privilege in order that a formal verdict of "not guilty" might be taken, his ruling was adversely commented upon in the House of Lords by Lord Halsbury, L. C., Lord Herschell and Lord Fitzgerald. Lord Coleridge was found alone in his opinion that such waiver was permissible, and it may be added that the precedents were altogether against him, for the exact contrary had been laid down in the resolutions of all the judges in the early cases of Lord Daer, temp. Henry VIII (Kel. 89) and Lord Audley, temp. Charles I (3 Howell's State Trials, 402). In the latter case, it was held that the right of a peer of the realm to trial by his peers was "no privilege, but the law declared by Magna Charta, which, if he would not plead to by a trial of his peers, it was standing mute." Where, therefore, a Lord of Parliament is charged with treason or felony, the only Court which can try the indictment is the House of Lords, that is to say, to speak with legal precision, the King in Parliament, or, in the event of Parliament not being in session, the Court of the Lord High Steward. In either event, a Lord High Steward is appointed by commission from the Crown, who is usually the Lord Chancellor, and it is his duty to preside over the proceedings. When the trial is before the House of Lords, all peers of Parliament are competent to sit as judges of law and fact and have a full right to speak on the question before the House: but the votes of the Bishops are not taken. If Parliament is not sitting and the trial is held in the Court of the Lord High Steward, that official is the only judge of law and practice, and, although all Lords of Parliament are summoned and have a right to attend as Lords Triers, they are judges of fact only. The procedure, which is full of old-fashioned solemnity, is based upon strict precedent. There has not been a trial of a peer for Felony since 1841, when the Earl of Cardigan was indicted for killing Captain Tuckett in a duel, and was acquitted on the ground that, whereas the indictment was for shooting at Harvey Garnett Phipps Tuckett with intent, and so forth, the Crown had failed to show that the person shot at bore that name in full—a technical variance in description which the passing of the Statute 14 and 15 Vict., c. 100, has since rendered immaterial. The proceedings on that occasion are fully reported at pp. 602 to 667 of the fourth volume of the new series of State Trials edited by Mr. Wallis, the present Advocate-General of Madras, and the form of trial then observed would appear to have been closely adhered to in the case of Earl Russell. When the indictment for felony has been found in the ordinary court of trial and the privilege of the defendant ascertained, a judge of the Court communicates the fact to the Lord Chancellor as Speaker of the House of Lords. The House proceeds to adopt a motion that “an humble address be presented to His Majesty to acquaint His Majesty” that a certain day has been appointed for the trial, and “humbly to desire that His Majesty will be graciously pleased to appoint a Lord High Steward to continue during the said trial.” The defendant peer is taken into the custody of Black Rod, and his surrender notified to the House. On the day of the trial, the peers assemble in their robes, and sit covered throughout the proceedings. The roll is called, and when every peer present has answered to his name, proclamation is made by the Serjeant-at-arms for the Yeoman Usher to bring the defendant peer to the Bar. He is thereupon brought to the Bar, uncovered and without his robes, and on approaching makes three reverences, and kneels until directed by the Lord High Steward to rise. Upon rising his next act is to make three more reverences, one to the Lord High Steward and one to the peers upon either side, who return the same with due formality. The prisoner is then conducted to the stool provided for him within the Bar, near to his counsel. He is “acquainted that he must address himself to the Lords in general, and not to the Lord High Steward,” and is arraigned on the indictment drawn against him by the Clerk of the Crown, who asks of him, “How say you, my Lord, are you guilty of the felony with which you stand charged, or not guilty?” If the reply be “Not guilty, my Lords,” the further question is put, “How will your Lordship be tried?” “By my peers,” is the answer, which is followed by the rejoinder from the Clerk of the Crown, “God send your Lordship a good deliverance.” The case for the Crown is then opened, and the proceedings which follow are on the lines of an ordinary criminal trial until the stage of deliberation is reached. The question of “guilty” or “not guilty” is put to the vote, and the Lord High Steward, standing up, calls every peer by name from a list, beginning with the junior baron and concluding with the senior peer of highest rank present. As the question is put to each peer, he stands up in his place uncovered, and laying his right hand upon his breast, replies “guilty” or “not guilty,” as the case may be, “upon my honour.” If a peer is convicted of felony, he is now, under 4 and 5 Vict., c. 22, liable to punishment in the same way as any other of His Majesty's subjects. Doubts existed at the trial of the Earl of Cardigan in 1841 as to whether the benefit of clergy and peerage could be claimed under 1 Edw. VI, c. 12, sec. 13, or whether the section had been repealed, as far as peers were concerned, by the Statute 7 and 8 Geo. IV, c. 28, which abolished benefit of clergy; and the Act of 1841 was expressly passed to remove all such doubts. When the verdict has been given and sentence, if any, pronounced, proclamation is made for dissolving the commission issued by the Crown to the Lord High Steward. The white staff of office is delivered by the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod to the Lord High Steward, who stands up uncovered and breaks it in two, declaring the commission to be dissolved. It may be observed that the Act 4 and 5 Vict., c. 22, while it provides that peers must plead as commoners, does not alter their mode of trial: and continuance of the privilege of peers as to the mode of trial is expressly recognized in sec. 29 of 19 and 20 Vict., c. 16 (which empowers the Court of King's Bench to order certain offenders to be tried at the Central Criminal Court) and in sec. 19 of the Jurisdiction in Homicides Act, 1862, (25 and 26 Vict., c. 65). The privilege extends to peeresses as well as to peers, but is limited to cases of treason and felony; and in cases of misdemeanour a peer may be tried like any commoner. The limitation, as Sir James Fitz James Stephen has pointed out in his History of the Criminal Law in England, is certainly as old as 1442, but that learned lawyer declares his inability to give the history of its evolution. According to the same authority, the office of Lord High Steward is probably a remnant of the Curia Regis or King's Court, which has survived unimpaired from the Norman conquest, if not from earlier times. The Earls of Leicester (we are told by Sir Edward Coke) held the office in hereditary succession until Simon de Montfort forfeited it to Henry III by rebellion. Henry granted the office and the earldom to his second son, Edmund, whence it descended to Henry of Bolingbroke, son and heir of John of Gaunt, and afterwards Henry IV. Since the reign of that monarch, it has been granted huc vice when occasion arose for the services of such an officer at the trial of a peer or at a coronation. There have been four trials of peers in the House of Lords since the end of the reign of George II, namely, Earl Ferrers for murder in 1760, Lord Byron for murder in 1765, the Duchess of Kingston for bigamy in 1776, and the Earl of Cardigan in 1841. Trials in the Court of the Lord High Steward have been extremely rare, and it is believed that the trial of Lord Delamere for treason before Jeffreys in 1686, is the last instance upon record. Lord Ferrers, it may be noted, was convicted and duly executed, a silken cord being provided for him out of consideration for his rank. In the cases of Lord Byron (who was found guilty of manslaughter) and the Duchess of Kingston, the Act of Edward VI was successfully pleaded, which allowed benefit of peerage in all cases of felony, except wilful murder and poisoning of malice prepense, and the defendants were discharged on payment of costs: but as has already been stated, the Statute 4 and 5 Viet., c. 22 has put an end to all such devices for evading punishment.

[TO THE EDITOR OF THE "CALCUTTA WEEKLY NOTES."]

DEAR SIR,—Sir V. Bhashyam Iyengar, who was appointed a judge of the High Court, Madras, in succession to Mr. Justice Shephard, has not yet taken charge of his judicial duties but is still practising at the bar. The reason for not taking his seat on the bench is, we understand, that he wishes to fulfil some of his professional engagements before he leaves the bar. The Madras lawyers wish to know your opinion as to the propriety of a man practising at the bar after his appointment as a judge has been announced.

COMMERCIAL COURT.—THE PENINSULAR AND ORIENTAL STEAM NAVIGATION COMPANY v. THE KING. Before MR. JUSTICE MATHEW. 21st June 1901.

Crew space for lascars—The Merchant Shipping Acts, 1854 and 1894—Indian Act XIII of 1876—Conflict between Act of Parliament and Government of India Act—Interpretation of statutes.

The question was which Act governed the matter of the requisite space to be provided by the company in their ships for the lascars. The company contended that the Indian Act is the one they had to follow and they had complied with its requirements. That position was controverted, the other side contending that the Merchant Shipping Act should be followed.

The learned Judge gave a considered judgment which inter alia states: "The Petitioners' ships were registered in the United Kingdom in accordance with the said Act of 1854 and the statutes amending the same, Act IV Geo. IV, c. 80, was an Act consolidating the law regarding trade to and from India. Sec. 25 thereof empowered the Governor-General of India to make regulations to be observed by the owners of vessels trading under the authority of the Act of which the crews were wholly or in part composed of lascars "for the due supply of provisions, clothing and other necessary accommodation of" such lascars. Sec. 26 that such regulations until repealed and altered were to be observed if they formed part of the Act. Now it was contended that by those sections the Governor-General had been given absolute power to exercise exclusive jurisdiction for the protection of lascars, though it could not be disputed that any such regulations as were made might at any time have been modified by subsequent enactments of the Imperial Parliament. It was said that that Act had authorized the subsequent Indian legislation as to lascars, and that an independent Code of regulations had been contemplated for lascars as distinguished from other seamen. The learned Judge held that the Indian legislation did not spring from that Act but from the 1854 Merchant Shipping Act. The definition clause of this last-mentioned Act showed that it applied to ships such as those owned by this Company and to their crews and no distinction was drawn between the European and lascar portion of a crew. Part III of the Act of 1854 contained various provisions as to crews but no provision as to the crew space to be appropriated. The Act contained two very important sections. Sec. 288 empowered the Governor-General of India in Council to apply or adopt any of the provisions in Part III to any British Ships registered at, trading with, or being at any place within his jurisdiction; and sec. 290 which said that if in any matter relating to any ship or to any person belonging to any ship there appeared to be any conflict of laws, then if there was in Part III of the Act any provision, on the subject applying to such ships the case should be governed by such provision, and if not, the case should be governed by the law of the place where the ship was registered. That Act having been passed, the first Indian Act was passed on the subject in 1859, and it clearly appeared from the preamble that it was passed in pursuance of powers conferred by sec. 288 of the Act of 1854. The Indian Act provided for the first time by sec. 70, but only very imperfectly; for the crew space to be appropriated for the seamen, both European and lascars. That statute was acted on down to 1876 when an Amendment Act was passed. Meanwhile by the Merchant Shipping Amendment Act, 1867, ample provisions had been made for crew space for seamen in ships to which the Act applied. Those provisions had been repealed by the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, under sec. 210, whereof further provision was made for crew space. After the passing of that Act there could be no question, but that the Indian Act was in conflict with the Imperial Act. Sec. 288 of the Act of 1854 had been re-enacted by sec. 265 of the Act of 1894, and the position therefore was that in the case of a conflict the Imperial Act was to prevail. The position was perfectly clear, the Crown was entitled to the declaration that the company was bound to provide crew space for the lascars employed in their ships in accordance with the provisions of the Act of 1894. That Act and not the Indian Act governed the question.

N. A. SUBRAMANIA IYER

v.

THE KING-EMPEROR.

1901.

6, 8, 26, and 28, June.]

Joinder of charges—Tender of pardon—King's evidence—Charter Act—Letters Patent, 1865, sec. 26.

This was an appeal against a decision of the High Court of Judicature at Madras under sec. 26 of the Letters Patent of 1865, which in modification of the verdict of the jury in a case tried at the First Criminal Sessions for the Town of Madras in 1900, and of the sentence pronounced in pursuance of such verdict by the presiding Judge, sentenced this Appellant to a term of two years' rigorous imprisonment and a fine of Rs. 5,000 and in default of payment of the fine to a further term of nine months' rigorous imprisonment.

The Appellant, N. A. Subramania Iyer, was Superintendent of the Military Accounts Department of Madras. John Lewis Philip D'Santos was Supervisor of the same Department subordinate to him.

On the 8th day of November 1899 the Chief Presidency Magistrate of Madras framed ten charges against the Appellant and the said D'Santos for offences under secs. 109, 161 and 384, of the Indian Penal Code, and committed them for trial on the said charges to the High Court of Madras.

The case came on for hearing at the First Criminal Sessions for the year 1900 when the Appellant and the said D'Santos were jointly charged under the said sections upon an indictment which contained seven counts.

The first count stated as follows:—

"That they, the said N. A. Subramania Iyer and the said John L. P. D'Santos, being public servants to wit, respectively Deputy Examiner, Superintendent and Supervisor of the Accounts Branch of the Military Accounts Department, in or about the month of March 1896 did conspire and combine together, and thereafter until the month of November 1898 did continue so to conspire and combine, for the purpose of extorting money and obtaining illegal gratifications from clerks in the Accounts Branch of the Military Accounts Department for himself the said N. A. Subramania Iyer, in pursuance of and according to which said conspiracy and combination the said N. A. Subramania Iyer did obtain for himself through the said John L. P. D'Santos divers sums of money, to wit, from one Kaliana Chetty during the years 96, 97 and 98 sums amounting in the aggregate to Rs. 680; from one C. Balasundra Mudaly the sum of Rs. 100 on or about August 27th, 1896, the sum of Rs. 50 on or about March 1st, 1897, and the sum of Rs. 100 on or about May 10th, 1897; from one K. Sreenivasa Charry the sum of Rs. 100 on or about October 2nd, 1898; and from one C. Vedachella Chetty the sum of Rs. 5 in August 1898, the sum of Rs. 5 in September 1898, the sum of Rs. 3 in October 1898, and the sum of Rs. 3 in November 1898, and that they have thereby committed an offence punishable under secs. 109 and 384 and secs. 109 and 161 of the Indian Penal Code, and within the cognizance of the High Court of Judicature at Madras aforesaid."

The second, fourth and sixth counts charged the Appellant with having, on or about the 7th August 1896, the 1st March 1897, and the 10th May 1897 respectively, dishonestly induced one C. Balasund Moodelliar to pay to himself through the said J. P. D'Santos the sums of Rs. 100, Rs. 50 and Rs. 100, the first and second of such acts being charged as an offence punishable under sec. 161 or 384 of the Indian Penal Code while the third is charged as an offence under secs. 109 and 161. The third, fifth and seventh counts charged D'Santos with having abetted the Appellant in the commission of the offences set out in counts two, four and six respectively, and as being thereby punishable under secs. 109 and 161 or 384.

On the 14th February 1900 the case came on for trial before Mr. Justice Boddam, when the Appellant's counsel took two objections to the indictment, first, that the first count was bad in itself under sec. 234 of the Criminal Procedure Code, and, secondly, that under the same section the union of the first count with the second, fourth and sixth made the whole indictment bad for misjoinder.

Then objections were overruled by Mr. Justice Boddam who recorded the following reasons:—

"I see no objection to the first count. It charges one offence, viz., the offence of a continuing conspiracy, which has been carried out in the manner therein shown and thereby shown to be a continuing conspiracy and is punishable as abetment under sec. 109."

"I see no objection to the first count being combined with the rest of the indictment under sec. 230."

On behalf of the Crown an application was made that a conditional pardon might be tendered to the second accused. The learned Judge declined to consider the application until the second accused had pleaded to the charges preferred against him. He then pleaded guilty to the 1st, 3rd, 5th and 7th counts, and his plea was recorded.

Before the pardon was tendered the Appellant's counsel objected that such a tender would be ultra vires, firstly, because the offences in question were not exclusively triable by the High Court, and, secondly, because pardon could not be tendered to D'Santos as he had already pleaded guilty. The objection was overruled, the learned Judge then tendered to the second accused a pardon under sec. 338 of the Criminal Procedure Code, following the words of sec. 337, and he was then removed from the dock. The whole of this proceeding took place in accordance with a previous arrangement arrived at between D'Santos and the Government Solicitor, and the plea of guilty however apparently voluntary, was in fact made in the hope of purchasing a pardon.

The jury was then empanelled and the trial proceeded upon the entire indictment, and evidence was given upon all the criminal acts charged in the first and subsequent counts. When the evidence of D'Santos was tendered, the Appellant's counsel objected to his being sworn on the ground of the validity of his pardon. This objection was overruled.

The only evidence which is material in the present appeal is that bearing on the sixth count.

Balasundara Moodelly, after speaking to the previous bribes which he said he had paid D'Santos at his request for the purpose of being paid to the Appellant, says that on the 30th April 1897, he received from D'Santos a letter marked B. "Before receiving this letter I had a conversation with D'Santos: He asked me to give Rs. 100 to the Iyer for having given me permanent promotion. I said I would speak to my father." From his father he procured two notes each for Rs. 50 which are identified as Nos. T 32418 and T 43491. These Balasundara gave on the 10th May to D'Santos in a cover. This cover he says D'Santos took into the Appellant's room and subsequently returned leaving the cover empty on Balasundara's desk. As he sat he heard the Appellant call Sivachandra Row and ask him to change some currency notes, Sivachandra was a clerk in the office, Balasundara says that there was no attempt at secrecy in getting the notes changed by Sivachandra, and that beside Sivachandra he had frequently seen peons and mucchees take notes to change. It is proved that on the 10th May Sivachandra changed these two notes for a single note of Rs. 100, and that on the 26th May he purchased on behalf of the Appellant Government paper for Rs. 800, this note of Rs. 100 being part of the price paid. Sivachandra is not called for the prosecution. He is produced as a witness for the defence and swears that he received the two Rs. 50 notes from Balasundara and changed them into one for Rs. 100. That on the 25th May he received Rs. 800 from the Appellant to purchase Government securities and put them into his box; that the purchase was made on the 26th and that he paid in his own Rs. 100 note taking in its place small notes part of those supplied by the Appellant.

D'Santos in his evidence threw the whole blame as to the demand for and the receipt of the bribes upon the Appellant. He admitted that about February a pardon was suggested in reference to which he says he went to the Government Solicitor, Mr. Barclay, and made a written statement. "It struck me I was likely to be convicted on the prosecution evidence. I was anxious to escape being convicted. I did not intend to stand my trial. Whether I am pardoned or not I am speaking the truth from strong moral grounds."

At the close of the evidence the jury found the Appellant guilty on the first, second and sixth counts, being advised by the Judge not to find a verdict of guilty on the fourth. By six to three they found that D'Santos had not spoken truth throughout. The Judge then ordered him to be placed in the dock, and sentenced the Appellant to three years' rigorous imprisonment with a fine of Rs. 8,000, and in default of payment to a further year's rigorous imprisonment. D'Santos was sentenced to three years' rigorous imprisonment.

Subsequently to this conviction and sentence the Officiating Advocate-General gave a certificate under sec. 26 of the Letters Patent for the High Court of Judicature at Madras, the material clauses of which are as follows:—

"(a) That in my judgment the learned Judge who presided at the First Criminal Sessions of the High Court of Judicature at Madras for 1900 erred in law in deciding that it was competent to him to tender a pardon to D'Santos notwithstanding that none of the offences in respect of which the said N. A. Subramania Iyer was being tried was within the meaning of the Criminal Procedure Code, exclusively triable by the High Court and that therefore, the learned Judge erred in law in admitting the evidence given by D'Santos as a witness for the Crown after pardon had been tendered to him and in placing the same before the jury.

"(b) That in my judgment the said learned Judge erred in law in not striking out the first count from the indictment but trying and convicting the said N. A. Subramania Iyer on it and in allowing evidence to be adduced by the Crown in respect of the first count as regards matters of alleged extortions of money and illegal gratifications therein specified other than those forming the subject-matter of the second, fourth and sixth counts and placing the same before the jury.

"(c) That in my judgment the learned Judge erred in law in trying the said N. A. Subramania Iyer on the first, second, fourth and sixth counts at one trial."

Upon this certificate the case was heard twice before the full Court of six Judges. First upon the question of law and next upon the facts.

On the questions of law all the Judges held that the offer of a pardon to D'Santos was illegal, but all with the exception of Davies, J., held that his evidence was still admissible.

As to the first count while the Chief Justice, Shephard and Boddam, JJ., held that it was good, Benson, Moore and Davies, JJ., held that it was bad.

All the Judges, except Boddam, J., held that whether it was good or bad its union with the remaining counts made the whole indictment bad for misjoinder. But all the Judges, except Davies, J., who gave a qualified opinion, thought that it was open to them to strike out the first count and deal with the evidence applicable to the remaining counts.

Upon the final hearing upon the facts all the Judges were of opinion that the Appellant should be acquitted on the second count. They also agreed in thinking that D'Santos was utterly untruthful and that no reliance whatever could be placed upon his evidence. As to the sixth count which alone remained all the Judges except Davies, J., were of opinion that after excluding the evidence of D'Santos and disbelieving as they did the evidence of Sivachandra, there was enough left to support the conviction of the Appellant on the sixth count. Davies, J., thought that the charge being laid as one of bribery, the evidence of Balasundara was the evidence of an accomplice, which according to the invariable practice of the Courts of India required corroboration. As to Sivachandra he said, "now whether this story be true or false it is no corroboration of Balasundara's story and brings nothing home to the first accused. I therefore find that there is no legal evidence upon which the sixth count can be supported. Supposing again that I am wrong in appreciating the evidence, surely it was a case in which the jury might have doubts and might have given the accused the benefit of the doubt." Then he relied on the judgment of the Lord Chancellor in Makin v. Attorney-General for New South Wales (A. C. [1894] 57) as showing that where the accused was entitled to the finding of a jury, it was not open to the Court upon different evidence from that which had been before the jury to pronounce that he was guilty.

The result was that in modification of the original sentence the Court sentenced the Appellant to a term of two years' rigorous imprisonment and a fine of Rs. 5,000, and in default of payment of the fine to a further term of nine months' rigorous imprisonment.

Mr. Mayne for the Appellant contended that the Court was wrong in holding that while the tender of pardon to D'Santos was illegal, his evidence given to earn a pardon was admissible; D'Santos was not a convicted person, he was an accused person under trial awaiting judgment. The tender of pardon was illegal. He referred to Reg v. Hanmanta (1. L. R. 1 Bom. 610, see 617); Empress of India v. Asghar Ali (1. L. R. 2 All. 260). Criminal Procedure Code, secs. 337, 338, 342 and 343. Evidence Act, sec. 24, Oaths Act, 1873, sec. 5. A trial does not necessarily come to an end with a plea of guilty, Queen v. Chenna Pavachi (1. L. R. 23 Mad. 151), when the accused gave his evidence he was an incompetent witness and an oath could not be lawfully administered to him.

Excepting the offence of conspiracy punishable under sec. 121A of the Indian Penal Code (waging war against the Queen) there was no offence of conspiracy as such under the Penal law of India. It is only otherwise indictable when it amounts to abetment; secs. 107, 108 and 109 were read, each offence abetted makes a separate offence of abetment and more than one such offence can be tried together only under the provisions of secs. 233 and 234, Criminal Procedure Code. Upon the charge of bribery he submitted that there was no evidence on which a conviction could take place excluding the evidence of D'Santos who had been unanimously disbelieved, sec. 167, Evidence Act. The High Court had no jurisdiction to substitute for the verdict of the jury their own verdict founded on evidence being residue of the evidence before the jury. Their power was limited under sec. 26 of the Letters Patent. The High Court had no jurisdiction to amend the indictment by striking out the first count. He contrasted sec. 2 of XI and XII Vict., c. 87 (1848), which was followed in the New South Wales Criminal Amendment Act, 1883, and was the basis of the ruling in (1884) A. C., p. 57, with secs. 25, 26, 27, 28 and 38 of the Letters Patent.

The trying of the four different counts together at one and same trial is illegal, sec. 233, Criminal Procedure Code, whole trial inoperative if more than three counts joined, sec. 334.

In the matter of Abdur Rahman (1. L. R. 27 Cal. 839, see 845-7).

The following cases were also referred to:—Regina v. Navroji Dadubhai (9 Bom. H. C. R. 358, see 367 and 372).

Queen v. Haribol Chunder Ghose, (1. L. R. 1 Cal. 207, see 216-17).

Queen-Empress v. O'Hara (1. L. R. 17 Cal. 642).

Waffadar Khan v. Queen-Empress (1. L. R. 21 Cal. 935).

Makin v. Attorney-General, New South Wales (1894, A. C. 57, see. 69). Regina v. Mellor, p. 468 at p. 519 bottom.

On the question of costs, see Macleod v. Attorney-General of New South Wales (1891, A. C. 455).

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—Your contention is that the man has been tried contrary to law. It is not merely the proper or improper admission of evidence. The New South Wales case came under a particular statute.

Mr. Phillips then addressed their Lordships on behalf of the Crown.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—You will have to deal with the fact that the offences were committed over a much greater period than 12 months and were all tried together. Whether the Appellant has not been tried for more offences than the law permits at one trial.

Mr. Phillips rested his argument on sec. 335, Criminal Procedure Code, the whole series of Acts were connected together so as to form one transaction. He commented on some of the decisions referred to by Mr. Mayne. He referred to sec. 537, Criminal Procedure Code, and urged that the order of the High Court had not occasioned any failure of justice, (L. R. 27 I. A., p. 846). Improper admission of evidence was not of itself ground for reversal of any decision under terms of sec. 167, Evidence Act, (I. L. R. 1 Cal. 216-7).

The accused person mentioned in the sections of the Code to which Mr. Mayne drew attention meant the person who was to be tried.

The High Court has power to review the case sec. 26, Charter Act, and finally determine points of law and to alter the sentence, and pass such judgment and sentence as shall seem right.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—Can the High Court make the trial right by altering the record?

Mr. Phillips.—There must be a point of law, and that point must have been decided, then the Court may correct the decision and deal with the sentence.

The LORD CHANCELLOR at the close of the arguments said:—Their Lordships would take time to consider their judgment.

The Advocate-General, Palit, O'Kinealy and Garth for the Respondent.

In this appeal Mr. Mittra, in the absence of Mr. W. C. Bonnerjee, opened the appeal and was followed on the same side by Mr. J. G. Woodroffe. The Advocate-General addressed the Court on behalf of the Respondent, after which Mr. W. C. Bonnerjee rose to reply on behalf of the Appellant.

Mr. W. C. Bonnerjee.—I leave myself in the hands of the Court. I know of one instance in which three counsel were heard on the same side. That was the case of *Troglucko Nath Ghose v. There the present Advocate-General who appeared for the Appellant with Sir Griffith Evans and myself opened for the Appellant and was followed by Sir Griffith Evans. At the close of the Respondent's case neither the Advocate-General nor Sir Griffith Evans were in Court, and the Court heard me in reply although the Respondent's counsel objected to my being heard.

The Advocate-General.—The practice here is the same as that prevailing in England; and that is, when one counsel opens and is followed on the same side by another a third counsel is not entitled to reply. The instance cited by Mr. Bonnerjee is an exceptional one, for in that case neither of the two counsel who addressed the Court on behalf of the Appellant in the first instance was in Court at the time of the reply. This is not so in this case for J. G. Woodroffe is in Court. I maintain that the practice I have stated is the practice that prevails in these Courts and therefore Mr. Bonnerjee is not entitled to be heard in reply.

Mr. W. C. Bonnerjee.—I accept the learned Advocate-General's statement as to the practice, but this is a somewhat exceptional case. I was briefed for the Defendant in this appeal and would have opened the appeal had it not been that I was absent from Calcutta on Tuesday morning when the appeal came on for hearing.

MACLEAN, C. J.—As we have been told by the head of the Bar that this is the practice we must accept it.

Mr. J. G. Woodroffe then replied.

REPORTS (See Index.)

THERE WILL BE SOME CHANGES IN THE CONSTITUTION in the High Court Benches from Tuesday the 6th of August next. There will be a special Bench presided over by Mr. Justice Ameer Ali to dispose of admitted criminal appeals, the list of criminal cases being at present very heavy. Mr. Justice Ghose and Mr. Justice Harrington will attend to the current criminal business other than admitted appeals. Mr. Justice Taylor will sit with Mr. Justice Hill in the Rajshahye Group. There will be no changes in the Presidency and Patna and Burdwan Groups. Since Mr. Justice Harrington is going over to the Appellate Side, Mr. Justice Sale and Mr. Justice Stanley will during the present week attend to the ordinary business on the Original Side. Mr. Justice Stanley is not likely to sit on the Original Side after the present week and it is expected that in the course of the next week there will be further changes in the constitution of the Benches.

WE ARE GLAD TO BE INFORMED THAT SIR BHASYAM Iyengar never in fact practised at the Bar since his appointment was announced and that he took his seat on the Bench of the Madras High Court from the 1st of August last.

WE UNDERSTAND THAT THE HON'BLE THE CHIEF Justice's scheme for the reorganisation of the Original Side Offices and the appointment of another barrister judge, has been submitted by the Government of India to the Bengal Government for consideration and opinion. Even if the recommendations of the Chief Justice meets with the ready approval of both the Bengal and the India Government, it is not likely that the changes contemplated will come into operation before November 1902. The Attorneys, however, seem to be anxious that some temporary arrangements should be made in the meantime for the taxation of bills, which are said to be continually falling into arrears from the want of an adequate staff.

THE Capital, THE COMMERCIAL ORGAN OF CALCUTTA, has raised, not a day too soon, a vehement protest against the filling up of public offices on the principle of patronage. We have often urged that vacancies on the Bench should, so far as practicable, be filled by a judicious selection from amongst the members of the local Bar. We recognise at the same time the importance of getting out occasionally some really good men from the English Bar. They come to this country with an open mind, with broader views of justice and equity, and the introduction of such fresh blood into the body of our judiciary is always likely to improve the health and tone of the High Court Benches.

WE ALSO AGREE WITH OUR CONTEMPORARY THAT BOTH the emoluments and duties of the Offices of the Official Receiver, Official Assignee and Official Trustee may be divided with great advantage to the public. The law offices should not be filled up or regulated on any different principle from that of other public offices. Having regard to the reforms that the Chief Justice is anxious to introduce on the Original Side, and the Government in the Administrator-General's Office, it is only appropriate that the question of the reorganisation, reform, or readjustment of other law offices should also be taken in hand at one and the same time.

IT IS NOT UNCOMMON AMONGST JUDGES TO CONSULT each other about different matters arising out of cases, with a view to come to a decision. There can be little objection to this practice when the judges are of co-ordinate powers and are independent of each other except, perhaps, on the ground that it is not always fair to a judge, who has not had the advantage of either hearing the argument or going into the whole case, to be asked to pronounce an opinion with regard to it. But when any opinion has been expressed by a judge under such circumstances, it seems to be reasonable that the opinion itself, as also the reasons for it, should be clearly embodied in the judgment especially when reliance is placed on such opinion. Such is the view expressed by the Judicial Committee in the case of Harris v. Brown (5 C. W. N. cccx) to be shortly reported by us in full.

The learned Judges say that in the construction of the clause they have had the advantage of the opinion of Mr. Justice Gupta who is fully conversant with the Bengali language which is his mother tongue and who agrees with them in the meaning to be attached to it. Then Lordships remark upon this that Judges who have heard the arguments and who are responsible for the decision can hardly with propriety rest it on the authority of one who has not heard the arguments and is not responsible for the decision though he also may be a Judge of the High Court. It is true that this case is a peculiar one in which Judges have to interpret a language which seems to be imperfectly known to themselves and to be familiar to a colleague. But then then Lordships are not informed how Mr. Justice Gupta translates the Bengali words. It is only said that he agrees with the meaning which the other learned Judges below attach to the clause in question.

MEANING OF WORDS IN A WILL.

We noticed in the columns of the Englishman of 1st August last a paragraph commenting on the recent Privy Council decision in Harris v. Brown which commences as follows: "The Judicial Committee of the Privy Council has lately been called upon to decide a moot question of Bengali interpretation, and in doing so have reversed the decision both of the Subordinate Judge of Backerganj—himself a Bengali—and of the High Court." As we cannot publish a full report of this appeal till our next issue, we consider it proper to remove any misapprehension in the public mind that the above remarks may give rise to as regards the correctness of the decision of the Judicial Committee. In their judgment their Lordships of the Privy Council say: "In his judgment he (the Subordinate Judge) states the paragraph of the Will in the same words as are stated in the translation in the transmitted record of the proceedings with one exception. Instead of the words being, as in that, 'the executor will make over his share to him' it is, 'the executor will make over charge of his share to him.'" Later on their Lordships say: "The official translation in the record, that by the sworn interpreter of the High Court, and that of the Judges agree regarding the critical words;" and further "The learned Judges (of the High Court) say that, as the Subordinate Judge is a Bengali, it would require very cogent reasons to induce them to place a different construction on the clause in question. Certainly, it is impossible to be too careful in ascertaining the exact effect of the Bengali terms. But that has been done after an unusual amount of testing and there is no disagreement about it." The italics are our own and are conclusive that not only did their Lordships of the Privy Council not interfere with the translation of the Bengali words given by the Subordinate Judge, but they accepted it and based their decision on such translation. All they did was to apply principles of law, well-known and well-established both in England and India, to that translation. Unfortunately, however, such principles of law seem to have been overlooked by the learned Subordinate Judge who decided the case in the first instance and the learned Judges of the High Court who affirmed his decision. The Will directs that the testator's residuary estate "shall descend in equal shares to the eldest son to be born to each of the daughters of my late brother." . . . "The sons of those daughters (of my brother) shall after their birth remain under the guardianship of the executor sahib until they attain majority at the expiry of 21 (twenty-one) years, and whenever the eldest son of any of the ladies shall attain majority, the executor will make over his share to him to his satisfaction." The Subordinate Judge and the learned Judges of the High Court seem to have overlooked the well-known axiom in interpreting Wills that a testator must be taken to have intended what he has said. See Brodbeck v. Thomson (1858, 12 Moo. P. C. C. 116), Abbot v. Muddleton, (1858, 7 H. L. C. 68). Instead of doing this the learned Judges seem to have read into the Will words of their own, refusing at the same time to give to the words in the Will their ordinary meaning. Both the Court of first instance and the lower Appellate Court in interpreting the Will imported into the residuary bequest after the words "to be born to each of the daughters of my late brother" the words "who shall survive and attain the age of twenty-one years." On the other hand their Lordships of the Privy Council in their judgment say: "The only safe course is to give to his (the testator's) words their plain ordinary meaning." The reasonableness of this rule of law is so obvious that, we are sure, our contemporary will now share with us the apprehension that it is not their Lordships' decision but that of the Courts below that was "calculated to disturb settled principles." Our contemporary will also agree that law is common sense and as such is most acceptable both to the lay and the legal mind when it is interpreted in a common sense fashion. It is not always the fault of the law but oftener of its interpretation that has drawn on it questionable complements and it is certainly useful to remember what the learned Chief Justice once said at the Convocation of the Calcutta University, that the best law is that which is most consonant with common sense.

English Notes.

COMMERCIAL COURT.—REPELTO v. FRIARY STEAMSHIP COMPANY. Before MR. JUSTICE MATHEW. 16th February 1901.

Contract—Buyer's right of approval of article—Condition precedent.

Defendants bargained to sell their steamship Friary to Plaintiff for £19,000. A deposit thereon was to be paid of £1,900 which was paid. The Friary as per agreement was to be delivered to Plaintiff at Cardiff. The Plaintiff had the right of approval "on full and complete inspection of hull and machinery." On the arrival of the vessel at Cardiff the Plaintiff had her inspected by an engineer and a surveyor, but before he obtained the latter's report, he notified to Defendant that he did not approve of the ship.

This was an action to recover the deposit money. The defence was that Plaintiff was only entitled to refuse to complete the purchase, if after inspection he found valid reasons for not approving, and that the refusal was arbitrary and not bona fide.

After evidence had been gone into, the learned Judge found that the Plaintiff had rejected the vessel on reasonable grounds, and the circumstances justified his doing so. The decisions showed that where a buyer had the right of approving of the article to be purchased, that approval was a condition precedent of the contract coming into effect. Of course the buyer must not act deceitfully or capriciously. If he acted bona fide, the fact that he exaggerated the defects would not disentitle him to refuse to complete the purchase. The evidence disclosed good faith, and on the terms of the contract judgment must be in his favour for the recovery of the deposit with costs.

COURT OF APPEAL.—COOPER v. KNIGHT. Before the MASTER OF THE ROILS, LORDS JUSTICES COLLINS and ROMER. 25th February 1901.

Breach of promise of marriage—Service of writ out of jurisdiction—Order XI, Rule 1(c).

This was an application which was refused by Mr. Justice Channel for service of a writ at Brussels where the Defendant Knight, a florist, resided. The writ was based on the promise to marry made in England and the performance was to take place also within the jurisdiction, and Comber v. Leyland (1898, A. C. 524) was relied on. The Plaintiff stated in her affidavit that the reply to her letter requesting an explanation of his silence was unsatisfactory.

The COURT OF APPEAL gave leave to issue and serve the writ out of the jurisdiction.

Mr. Bosall supported the application.

Appeal allowed.

CHANCERY DIVISION.—PEARKS, GUNSTON, AND TEE, LIMITED v. THOMPSON TALMEY & CO. Before MR. JUSTICE FARWELL. 8th February 1901.

Right of limited company to trade under another name—Secs. 41 and 42, Companies Act, 1862—Injunction to restrain use of designation "Talmey & Co."

The Defendants, Thompson and Rumino, were formerly employed in a South Kensington Poulterer's shop called "Talmey & Co." Besides that shop they had a number of other shops in London and in the country. Mr. Alfred Talmey who conducted that particular shop had assigned the lease and good-will to the Plaintiffs' predecessors in title. The two Defendants set up a poulterer's shop close by after they left Plaintiffs' establishment where they were assistants in service and designated it, "Thompson Talmey & Co." The only reason given by them for so doing was that Alfred Talmey was Thompson's brother-in-law and Thompson had named a son of his "Talmey." It appeared from the evidence that Thompson Talmey & Co. had written to a customer of the old South Kensington establishment drawing attention to their shop and soliciting custom; neither the letter nor the reasons given for assuming the Talmey name were justified by Defendants' counsel, and the latter were considered ridiculous by the learned Judge. On the point of law argued he held on a construction of sec. 41 of the above Act, that the name of an old firm may be retained by a limited company so long as in other respects the company complied with that Act. No doubt Plaintiffs had been guilty of breach of certain provisions of sec. 41, but penalty for such breach had been provided in the following section, and if he were to accede to Defendants' request to refuse the injunction for that reason, he would be imposing an additional penalty not contemplated by the Act and in opposition to the House of Lords' ruling in the case of Wright v. Horton (12 A. C. 371).

Mr. Uppohn, K. C., and Mr. Galbraith in support of the grant of injunction.

Mr. Butler, K. C., and Mr. Buckmaster for the defence.

Injunction granted.

CHANCERY DIVISION.—THE RIVER PLATE CONSTRUCTION COMPANY v. CHARLES BRIGHT. Before MR. JUSTICE FARWELL. 24th April 1901.

Arbitration Act, 1889—Binding effect of award—Conduct of party repudiating it.

The question in this case was whether Mr. Charles Bright had affirmed an award by a letter which he wrote to the construction company's solicitor, after his having issued a writ to have the award set aside on the grounds (1) that it was bad for uncertainty and (2) the arbitrator refusing to state a case on a question of law, to wit, the construction and validity of an agreement of 10th August 1899.

That agreement was made between the above-named construction company, Messrs. Capel and Co., brokers, and Mr. Charles Bright. It was for the purpose of forming an English company to acquire the Montevideo tramways. Mr. Charles Bright, called thereon the vendor, was to secure extended concessions from the Municipality of Montevideo and their consent to use electric traction. The parties fell out over such agreement. The arbitrator who was nominated after Mr. Bright had issued his writ, delivered his award on 11th March 1901, and directed Mr. Bright to pay £60,000 to Capel & Co. as purchase-money for shares to the like nominal amount in the construction company. On 29th March 1901 the following letter was written as aforesaid by Mr. Bright: "In accordance with Mr. Capel & Co.'s letter to sell to me £60,000 ordinary shares in the River Plate Construction Co., Ltd. with all rights and privileges as defined in the agreement of 10th August 1899, I beg to say that I have decided to purchase such shares and I have sold the same and will call with the purchasers who will take transfer and pay for same." It was stated in the letter that it was without prejudice to the illegality of the award. On Mr. Bright moving to set aside the award he was met by the above letter as affirming the award.

MR. JUSTICE FARWELL allowed the objection as a good objection and dismissed Mr. Bright's motion with costs, but granted leave to appeal.

Mr. Upjohn, K. C., and Mr. Saksnonne for the objector.

Objection allowed.

CHANCERY DIVISION.—SCOTT v. THE BRITISH AND FOREIGN SCHOOL SOCIETY (in re VAUGHAN). Before MR. JUSTICE JOYCE. 19th February 1901.

Will—Construction—Defective description of legatee—Admissibility of evidence to explain testator's meaning—Description in account-books.

The testator, Henry Vaughan, a well-known collector of pictures, residing in the Regents Park District, made a Will in 1887; he thereby bequeathed the residue of his personal property in trust to pay the proceeds to trustees of "the British and Foreign Schools in the Borough Road, London." He had taken great interest in the British and Foreign School Society, and from 1856 down to his death in 1899 he had been a governor thereof. At the time of the date of the Will the society had land belonging to it in the Borough Road whereon it had built a school, but when the testator died that had been disposed of, the school being removed to Isleworth, but it had schools in other parts of the country. The society was founded in 1808, it had no trustees, and its object was the training of persons of both sexes "on the British system." The society in its documents always alluded to the Borough Road establishment as one school.

The dispute was between that society and the next-of-kin of the testator. The trustees of the Will sought the direction of the Court for their protection.

The learned Judge having alluded to the facts, pointed to the words used in the Will British and Foreign Schools and said there was no person exactly satisfying that description. In the Borough Road there was one school only belonging to the British and Foreign School Society. The legatee was not specifically named. Consequently there was an ambiguity; putting therefore himself in the position of the testator he found that ten years later than the date of the Will, the testator in his account books frequently referred to the society as the British and Foreign Schools, that was evidence admissible to explain the meaning, and his judgment must be in favour of the society.

CHANCERY DIVISION.—EDGAR OLIVER v. BANK OF ENGLAND. Before MR. JUSTICE KEKEWICH. 21st February 1901.

Stock broker—Honest misrepresentation of a fact—Agent assuming authority, which he does not possess.

FIRBANK'S EXECUTORS v. HUMPHREYS (L. R. 18 Q. B. D. 54) followed.

In this case certain consols stood in the names of the Appellant and his brother a solicitor called F. W. Oliver as trustees for certain persons. Powers-of-attorney were sent to a firm of stock brokers named Starkey Leveson and Cooke purporting to be signed by the two Olivers desiring them to transfer the same stock value over £2,000 into the names of other parties. The power-of-attorneys were made out to two of the members of the firm Starkey and Leveson, but Mr. Starkey alone demanded to act and did act under the powers-of-attorney. After the death of F. W. Oliver, the Plaintiff discovered that his name had been forged by his brother in the said powers-of-attorney and the result of such forgery the transfer of the stock unknown to him. He therefore commenced this action against the Bank for compelling replacement of the stocks into his name. The Bank consequently served the said firm of stock brokers with a third party notice claiming to be indemnified by the firm and individual members thereof.

Judgment by the learned Judge was pronounced in favour of Plaintiff declaring the liability of the Bank to retransfer to the name of Plaintiff like stocks of same value. Then with regard to the really contested matter whether the representation of the stock brokers constituted such a warranty in law, by the several members of that firm, as to entitle the Bank to be indemnified against their liability by the firm or any of its members, the learned Judge quoted the following passage from the above-mentioned decision "Speaking generally, an action for damages will not lie against a person who honestly makes a representation which misleads another. But to this general rule there is at least one exception well established, and that is that where an agent assumes an authority which he does not possess and induces another to deal with him upon the faith that he has the authority which he assumes." That principle was applicable to a case that was not a contract, and the transaction now in consideration came within the purview of the above decision. Mr. Starkey, though he had unquestionably acted honestly, was liable to make good the loss to the Bank. The later cases went further than the earlier cases relied on for the stock brokers by their counsel. Mr. Starkey's partners were however not liable, the transfers being executed by Mr. Starkey alone as attorney which constituted his liability.

Mr. Swinfen Eady, K. C., and Mr. S. Smith for the Firm.

Mr. Warrington, K. C., and Mr. Pattison for the Plaintiff.

Mr. Latham, K. C., and Mr. Wright for the Bank.

RICHARD SPURRIER AND JOHN LE CROMER, Agents in Jersey of the Sun Insurance Office,
Appellants,
GEORGE F. LA CLOCHE,
Respondent.

Petition for leave to defend an appeal in formâ pauperis.

Suit was brought by Respondent against the Appellants as agents as above for the sum of £1,000 with interest thereon and also for £300 damages and costs.

On the 6th November 1900 the inferior member of the Royal Court of Jersey decided in Petitioner's favour for £1,000, the amount of the Insurance with costs.

Appellants thereupon obtained leave to appeal to the superior member of that Court.

The superior member confirmed the order of the inferior member.

The Appellants then obtained leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council.

The Petitioner in his petition stated that he was very poor, supporting the statement by affidavits, and that by reason of such poverty was unable to defend such appeal unless he be admitted to do so in formâ pauperis.

And he prayed for an order that he may be admitted to appear to and defend such appeal in formâ pauperis.

In his affidavit Petitioner stated that he was not worth in all the world the sum of five pounds in lands, tenements, goods or chattels, the wearing apparel and the subject-matter in dispute excepted.

Mr. R. Story Deans appeared in support of the application. He admitted that he could produce no precedent in support of his application, but there was a practice in the High Court of Justice granting such applications.

LORD HOBHOUSE intimated that liberty to defend in formâ pauperis would be granted.

Application for rescinding an order granting leave to appeal in formâ pauperis.

In this case leave to appeal in formâ pauperis was granted by the Judicial Committee advising Her late Majesty to that effect on the 22nd May 1900. The facts are set out at p. cclxxvii of Vol. IV of the Calcutta Weekly Notes.

Mr. Mayne now contended that such leave should be rescinded on the ground that the proceedings of the Courts were all regular and the Court in neither of the cases could have properly come to any other conclusion than was arrived at. That in fact if the application had then been opposed, their Lordships would have refused it as a frivolous one.

Mr. Bernard Campion opposed, and he further submitted that this application should be rejected inasmuch as the Judge was so prejudiced that he was incapable of pronouncing a proper judgment. After hearing Mr. Mayne

LORD HOBHOUSE said their Lordships will advise His Majesty to rescind the order. Their reasons would be stated on a future occasion.

[APPEAL FROM OUDH.]

LORD HOBHOUSE.

LORD DAVEY.

LORD ROBERTSON.

SIR RICHARD COUCH

.1901.

20, June.

BABU MURLI DHUR,
Plaintiff, Appellant,LAL RAGHURAJ SINGH, Defendant, Respondent.Credibility of witnesses.

This was an appeal from a decree of the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh, reversing a decree of the Sub-Judge of Bara Banki.

The Plaintiff-Appellant is the son of Rai Narain Das, a retired Judge of the Small Cause Court, Lucknow. The Respondent is the only son of Raja Narender Bahadur Singh, talukdar of Harha, deceased, who was the original Defendant.

The present suit was filed on 23rd June 1892. The plaint alleged that on the 25th March 1889 the said Raja had executed 9 bills of exchange in favour of Appellant for a total sum of Rs. 8,444: that the consideration for those bills was a former debt for which bills of exchange had been executed by the said Raja, the interest promised was at 18 per cent. per annum according to the former practice. That on the 2nd September 1891 the said Raja had signed and made over to Appellant an account admitting Rs. 11,879 as then due, that no payment had been made and the principal and interest on date of suit was Rs. 13,626 for which sum with interest a decree was sought.

For the defence it was alleged that he never had any dealings with Plaintiff, that he had not borrowed any money from him, that he had not executed any bills of exchange; nor had he settled the accounts, nor signed the account of 2nd September 1891.

In support of his claim Plaintiff produced 9 bills of exchange purporting to be signed by the Raja by the pen of Rani Sahib. The said account of 2nd September 1891 was produced signed by the Raja, and marked Exhibit A3, and Letters A6 to A11 were produced.

The matters for decision on such pleadings were entirely matters of fact.

Mr. Mayne on the evidence contending that on the oral evidence it was proved that the money was paid for the Raja and received into his house, and all the proceedings up to and including the account were passed through his office, in the usual course of business, and that there was no reason to disbelieve the witnesses who assert that the Raja was personally cognizant of the transaction.

Mr. Degruther for the Respondent supported the decision of the High Court. That Court had held that the case of the Plaintiff is a fabrication with the object of recovering money which had been lent to the Rani or Suraj Bali and was irrecoverable from the real debtor.

[CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION.]

APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE

No. 372 OF 1899.

HILL, J.

TAYLOR, J.

1901.

11, July.

MOHIM CHANDRA GUHA, Plaintiff,

Appellant,

v.

ANNADA CHARAN DUTT and ors.,

Defendants, Respondents.

Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), sec. 108—Ex parte decree, when divisible—Appeal.

This was an appeal preferred on the 23rd February 1899, against the decree of Babu Jogendra Nath Roy, Sub-Judge of Zillah Chittagong, dated the 10th of October 1898, reversing the decree of Babu Tinowry Chowdhry, Additional Munsif of Chittagong, dated the 25th of February 1898.

The suit, out of which the present appeal arose, was brought by the Plaintiff to recover possession by establishing his rai-yati and dur-rai-yati title to the land in suit. The suit as against one set of Defendants (referred to here as the Basacks) was for the declaration of the Plaintiff's rai-yati title and as against the other Defendant, one Annada, for a declaration of his dur-rai-yati title and possession. These two sets of Defendants set up separate and distinct defences.

On the 20th July 1897 the suit was heard ex parte by the Munsif, and he made a decree declaring Plaintiff's title both as a rai-yati and as a dur-rai-yati.

On an application made by Annada under sec. 108, C. P. C., the same was granted, it being recorded expressly by the Munsif that the suit was restored and would be re-heard only with reference to Annada.

Subsequently the Basack Defendants made an application for review of the ex parte decree which was refused.

Annada disputed both the ruiyati and dur-raiyati title of the Plaintiff.

On the 25th February 1898 the Munsif after hearing the case decreed the Plaintiff's suit.

Both the Basack Defendants and Annada appealed against this decree, and the Subordinate Judge dismissed the Plaintiff's suit.

Plaintiff preferred this second appeal. The principal contention, material to this report, on behalf of the special Appellant, was that the Subordinate Judge had no jurisdiction to entertain the appeal of the Basack Defendants because there stood as against them the ex parte decree of the Munsif of the 20th July 1897 from which they had preferred no appeal and which they had not taken any legal measures to set aside.

Held—That the ex parte decree of the Munsif was divisible, and the decree, though in form a single decree, was equivalent to two decrees, one against the Basacks, and the other against Annada, and it remained a good and binding decree as against the Basacks.

That the Basacks were no parties to the rehearing and the Munsif had no jurisdiction to retry the case as against them, and that the appeal as against that decree to the Sub-Judge was not competent.

Contribution, suit for—Dispossession of one joint-tenant by another—Tortfeasor.

This was an appeal preferred on the 4th September 1899, against the decree of Babu Sham Chand Roy, Subordinate Judge of Beerbhoom, dated 31st of July 1899, reversing the decree of Babu Doorga Churn Sen, Munsif of Suri, dated the 16th March 1898.

This appeal arose out of a suit for contribution. Plaintiffs' allegations were that Defendants purchased one-third share of some lands contained in two jummas from Bidhumukhi, widow of Plaintiff's brother, and that they did not pay their share of the rent and that Plaintiffs were obliged to pay the rent; the present suit was therefore brought to recover the amount paid on their behalf to the landlord. The lower Appellate Court found that Defendants had brought a suit against the Plaintiffs for the establishment of right and recovery of possession of  $\frac{1}{3}$  share of 19 bighas odd of lands professing to have purchased from the said Bidhumukhi, widow of Plaintiff's brother, and that they had got a decree for the possession of it during the lifetime of the widow. The lower Appellate Court further found that it was not clear under what circumstances Defendants had been kept out of possession. The Plaintiffs paid the rent of 1298 to 1303, B. S., of the whole lands. The Defendants got decrees for mesne profits of the period against the Plaintiff. The lower Appellate Court held that Plaintiffs were wrong-doers in respect of the share of the Defendants and kept them out of possession during the period for which the payments of rent had been made. The suit was therefore dismissed. Plaintiffs preferred this second appeal.

Their Lordships in remanding the case observed as follows:—

The Defendants had acquired an interest under the conveyance executed in their favour by the widow of the deceased brother, and they were trying to get hold of the property by virtue of that conveyance. The Plaintiffs, so far as can be gathered from the materials upon the record, were disputing the right of the Defendants (the Plaintiffs in that case) to obtain possession of the property under their assignment from Bidhumukhi; and it can hardly be said that they were in the position of tortfeasors within the meaning of the expression as used by the learned Chief Justice in the case of Talak Chand Babu against Squadaminee Dasi (3 C. L. R. 456).

Case remanded for trial as to what amount the Plaintiffs are entitled to recover from Defendants.

Moulvie Serajul Islam for the Appellants.

Ejectment, suit for—Origin and nature of tenancy not known—Evidence of mode of dealing with land demised, of acts and conduct of parties—Permanent tenancy, presumption of—Alternative plea of acquiescence by conduct on failure of proof of substantive defence as to evidence of permanent tenancy, if permissible—Acquiescence, whether a question of fact—Facts justifying inference of permanent tenancy.

This was an appeal preferred on the 20th of January 1899, against the decree of T. W. Richardson, Esq., Additional Judge of 24-Pergunnahs, dated the 30th September 1899, affirming a decree of Babu Sasi Bhusan Chandhuri, Munsif of Alipur, dated the 22nd March 1898.

This appeal arose out of a suit brought by the Plaintiff, the official Receiver to the Bhukailash estate, to eject the Defendants from certain premises in Kidderpur measuring 1 bigha of land and having a pucca building upon it, on the ground that the Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 (the Sarbadhikaris), who held the premises were merely tenants-at-will not having a transferable interest; and that Defendant No. 3 (Madhab Karmokar) obtained his rights under his purchase and was a trespasser who was not entitled to remain on the land. The Sarbadhikari Defendants did not appear and the suit was contested by Defendant No. 3, Madhab Karmokar, and on his behalf it was contended that the notice was invalid, that the tenancy of the Sarbadhikaris was a permanent one by express as well as by implied grant; and that the Plaintiff was estopped from asking for khas possession.

The Sarbadhikari Defendants held the tenure as successors and heirs of Beni Madhub and Modhu Sudan Sarbadhikari, who, in their turn, inherited it from Jaggan Nath Sarbadhikari. For two generations the Sarbadhikaris had occupied the land as tenants of the estate paying a rent which was increased at irregular intervals. The Sarbadhikaris and their co-sharers had sold their rights to Defendant No. 3 at various dates and the latter had been in possession of the entire tenure since 1295, B. S.

To prove the origin and nature of the tenancy a patta was produced by the Defendant No. 3, but it was held to be not genuine but it appeared that a pucca house had been built upon the land by the tenant and that the building had been added to from time to time and that it had been standing on the land for a very considerable time.

The second issue framed which is material to this report was as follows:—

“Whether the Adhikaris held the tenure as a permanent one either by express or implied grant; if so, is the suit maintainable?”

The Munsif held that the tenancy was not a permanent one but that the conduct of the parties was such as to debar the landlord from evicting the Sarbadhikaris. That the landlord took Bharatia kabuliyat from them but allowed them to erect pucca structures on the land, which had been, even after the expiry of the term of the last kabuliyat, allowed to stand; and the Munsif, on these findings, dismissed the Plaintiff's suit.

On appeal the Additional District Judge of Alipur held that in the absence of all documentary evidence, the long possession of the vendor Defendants, the Sarbadhikaris, and their ancestors, and the fact that the landlord permitted a pucca house to be built upon the land by the tenant which house had been standing for a considerable time, raised the presumption that the original grant was some kind of permanent building grant; that the Defendant No. 3 could not be evicted from the land and that the suit had been rightly dismissed.

The present appeal was then preferred by the Plaintiff and the same questions as were raised in the Courts below were argued before the Court, and the further question was raised that as the Defendants in the first instance based their case upon a fraudulent patta, it was not open to them to set up the alternative case upon which they relied, viz., of long possession and acquiescence and conduct to prove that the tenancy was of a permanent character.

• Held—That when parties to a litigation set up a false document, that circumstance may induce the Court to view the evidence which they tender upon some other part of the case, with great care and possibly with some suspicion, but it does not prevent the parties from setting up such alternative case, nor prevent the Court from duly weighing and considering the evidence adduced in support of it.

Rani Surnojoyee v. Maharaja Satish Chandra Roy Baluador (10 Moo. 1. A. 123 [149]) referred to.

That the question of acquiescence is not a question of fact but of legal inference from the facts found and upon it the judgments of the Appellate Courts are not final.

Parsotam Gir v. Narbada Gir (I. L. R. 21 All. 504) referred to.

That the fact of long possession by the Defendants and their ancestors, the fact of the landlord having permitted them to build a pucca house upon it, that the house had been built there for a very considerable time, that it had been added to by successive tenants and that the tenure had from time to time been transferred by succession and purchase, in which the landlord was found to have acquiesced or of which he could not have been ignorant are facts sufficient to warrant the Court in presuming that the tenure was of a permanent nature, specially if the origin of the tenancy could not be ascertained.

Babu Dhanput Singh v. Gossan Singh (11 Moo. 1. A. 433), Gangadhar Sikdar v. Ayimuddin Shah Biswas (I. L. R. 8 Cal. 960), Prasanno Kumar Chatterjee v. Jagannath Basak and others (10 C. L. R. 25) and Ismail Khan Mahomed v. Jaigun Bibi, (I. L. R. 27 Cal. 570) cited.

That if there were documents, which showed the origin and nature of the tenancy, very different considerations would arise.

Mr. O'Kinealy, with him Babus Umakali Mukerjee and Joy Gopal Ghosa, for the Appellant.

Babus Nilmadhab Bose and Shib Chandra Palit for the Respondents.

Appeal dismissed.

REPORTS (See Index.)

MR. JUSTICE RAMPINI WILL PRESIDE AT THE NEXT Court of Criminal Sessions which will commence its sittings in the High Court on Wednesday, the 14th of August next.

MR. JUSTICE BRETT HAS BEEN GRANTED PRIVILEGE leave from the 15th of August to the 5th of September. Mr. Justice Pratt has already left for home on leave.

INTIMATION HAS BEEN RECEIVED THAT THEIR LORDSHIPS of the Privy Council have quashed the conviction of Sir S. Subramania Iyer, in the military accounts extortion case, by the Court of Criminal Sessions at Madras, which was upheld by a Full Bench of the Madras High Court. A report of the application for special leave will be found in our issue of the 23rd of July 1900 and that of the hearing in our issue of the 29th of July last. The appeal raised several important questions of criminal law such as, the admissibility of the evidence of an alleged accomplice obtained on the tender of pardon by the Crown: the illegal joinder of charges: the power of the High Court to alter or modify the verdict of a jury or to substitute their own findings in its place: the limitations of the curative effect of sec. 537 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. It is seldom that the decisions of our Criminal Courts are revised by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee; but when they are, we eagerly look forward to them in expectation of a more liberal construction of the law. As their Lordships endeavour ordinarily to do substantial justice to the aggrieved, their judgment in this case runs little chance of being warped by narrow technicalities.

ALL THE CASES REPORTED IN THIS ISSUE ARE OF special importance. The first one, Harris v. Brown, is the decision of the Judicial Committee relating to the construction of a Bengali Will on which we commented in our last issue. The next one is a decision of Maclean, C. J., and Banerjee, J., which settles a moot point of private international law relating to the jurisdiction of the British Courts over British subjects residing in British India and the power of Courts in British India to give effect to or question the merits of judgments of British Courts. The third, which recognises the power of the High Court to transfer proceedings under sec. 145 of the Code of Criminal Procedure from the file of one magistrate to that of another, is a decision of Ghose and Taylor, J.J., which differs very rightly from the view taken by Jenkins, C. J., on the same question in the Bombay High Court.

IN AN EARLIER ISSUE WE VENTURED TO POINT OUT from a constitutional point of view the mistake that the Government had made in conferring on a private association the right to return a representative of the land-holding class to the Bengal Council. Before conferring any such franchise, the Government ought in the first place to determine what should be the qualifications of a voter and as to how the election should be conducted. When, however, the Government does not care to fix any definite qualifications for voters or procedure for them to follow at the election, but leaves it altogether to a private body of men, mixed and miscellaneous in character, and not even incorporated or registered under any statute, there can be no guarantee against their altering or deviating from even such makeshift rules as they may possess for some general purpose or of following any course they please to attain any particular object in view. What has transpired in the public press about the election concerning scandals connected with land-holder's seat, fully confirms our view that the right to elect a member for the local legislature is too valuable and important a right to be given lightly to a private body to play with at their pleasure.

It was inopportune, and we may be permitted to say injudicious, to disfranchise a group of municipal bodies and to put up in their place a private association which has no legal status and is apparently unfit to rank as an electorate. A municipal body has a strictly legal status and a group of municipalities is, perhaps, an ideal electorate. What led the Government to disfranchise them is more than the public can comprehend. The Government had hitherto nominated a land-holder to be a member of the Council, and if the Government desired now to confer a franchise upon the class, the right to elect their own member, the best course would have been and would even now be to adopt the provisions of the Bombay Regulations in this respect.

WE REVERT TO THIS SUBJECT NOT ON ACCOUNT OF THE present electioneering scandals but because it may involve serious legal consequences. We have grave doubts whether the conferment of the franchise by the Government upon a private association, which does not profess to be even an association of land-holders and as such cannot in any way come under Reg. II D of 1899, is not altogether ultra vires, and the franchise, so conferred, in whatever manner exercised cannot be called into question in a court of law, as being ab initio null and void. It will be disastrous to admit a member to the Bengal Council returned by a body who have no legal status to do so. If such a member takes part in any deliberations of the Council, exception may be taken to them on account of the Council being not properly constituted. We are sure the Government will take note of this and take early steps to prevent the election being either questioned in a court of law or the future proceedings of the Council being in any way challenged, by inadvertently allowing a disqualified member to sit and vote.

[APPEAL FROM ALLAHABAD.]

LORD HOBHOUSE.	MUSST. BATUL BEGUM, Plaintiff,

LORD ROBERTSON
SIR R. COUCH.	SAIFID MANSUR ALI KHAN
1901.	and others, Defendants,

Pre-emption, suit for—Limitation Act (XV of 1877), Sec. 11, Arts. 10, 120 and 144.

This was an appeal from a decree of the Allahabad High Court confirming a decree of the Sub-Judge of Gorakhpur.

The Appellant's suit was to enforce a right of pre-emption in respect of certain shares in villages named in the plaint.

Of the Defendants-Respondents Bhagwati Pershad alone put in a written defence in which he pleaded inter alia, that the suit was barred by the statute of limitations.

Both Courts gave effect to such defence.

The Appellant contends that the suit is not barred by limitation.

The facts are, the Defendant Mansur Ali and his brother Zahur Ali owned 3rds of three villages Patrongwa, Sandhuria and Pipra, in equal shares and the whole of a village named Parsa.

On 14th March 1868 Zahur Ali mortgaged by conditional sale his share on the 4 villages to one Surja Pershad now represented by the Respondent Bhagwati Pershad, the mortgagor remaining in possession.

The mortgage was foreclosed and the period of grace of one year expired on 20th January 1881, (Regulation 17 of 1806).

Zahur Ali died in 1876; and after his death his brother Mansur Ali brought a suit in 1881 for redemption of the mortgaged property. That suit was eventually dismissed by an order of Her Majesty in Council on 13th July 1886, on the ground that the mortgagor had not done what was necessary by the terms of that regulation to entitle him to redeem.

Afterwards the Respondent, Bhagwati Pershad, brought a suit for possession of the mortgaged property and mesne profits.

That suit was decreed finally by the High Court on 6th July 1893. Thereupon Bhagwati Pershad, Respondent, was put in formal possession of the shares of 4 villages, and on 27th November 1893 executed a dakhilnamah in the usual manner.

The present Appellant hearing of those proceedings commenced the present suit on 4th July 1894, praying for a decree awarding possession of the property in suit on the basis of pre-emption, the condition of the wajib-ul-waz, the custom of the village, and the right of pre-emption under the Mahomedan-law, by setting aside all the proceedings and the foreclosure decree on payment of Rs. 35,000 the consideration-money or such sum as the Court thought proper.

The Sub-Judge following the decision in the case of Ali Abbas (I. L. R. 14 All. 405) held that the suit was time-barred as it was instituted long after 6 years from the date of the expiration of the year of grace in the foreclosure proceedings.

The High Court on appeal remanded the cause for trial of issue "Does the property in suit admit of physical possession?"

The Sub-Judge found that it did not.

The Division Bench thereupon referred the matter to a Full Bench.

The Full Bench pointed out that the said judgment in the case of Ali Abbas (I. L. R. 14 All. 405) had been misunderstood by the Sub-Judge. They dissented from the decision in Nath Pershad's case (4 All. Series 218). They could not see how a sale was any the less an absolute sale because it was not to take immediate effect and operation, and in their opinion the other conditions being present necessary to make Art. 10 applicable, that article could apply to a sale which in its inception was a mortgage by conditional sale but which either by the operation of Regulation 17 of 1806 or by the operation of Act IV of 1882 had become in effect an absolute sale with the right of redemption gone.

"In the present case if the whole of the property sold was capable of physical possession being taken by the mortgagee-vendee, we should hold that Art. 10 of the second schedule of Act XV of 1877 applied. The question really turns, as we have said on what is the meaning of 'physical possession' as that term is used in Art. 10 of the second schedule to Act XV of 1877. It must mean something different from 'actual possession,' and it must mean something different from ordinary possession. In Cl. (1) of sec. (1) of Act XIV of 1859, which was the clause prescribing the limitation in suits for pre-emption, the term used was 'possession,' and limitation ran from the time of possession being obtained by the vendee. In Goordhan v. Heera Singh (S. D. A. N. W. P. 1866, 181) a Full Bench of the Sadr Dewani held that the possession of Act No. XIV of 1859 must be an actual and not a constructive possession. In 1868 the question came again before a Full Bench, then of this Court, and in Ganeshee Lal v. Toola Ram (N. W. P. H. C. Rep 1868, 376) the Full Bench decided that the possession of Act XIV of 1859 included constructive as well as actual possession. It is probable that that decision led to the alteration of the wording of the article relating to limitation in pre-emption suits in the next succeeding limitation Act. In Art. 10 of the second schedule to Act No. IX of 1871 it was proscribed that limitation should run from the date when actual possession was taken under the sale. Then came a Full Bench of this Court in 1876, Jageshar Singh v. Jivahar Singh and others (I. L. R. 1 All. 311), in which a majority of the Full Bench held that the actual possession of Act No. IX of 1871 was the same thing as the possession of Act No. XIV of 1859 and included constructive possession. The then Chief Justice of this Court Sir Robert Stuart, in our opinion, was right in differing from the rest of the Full Bench. He held that the purchaser does not take actual possession of the properties sold to him until he takes physical and tangible possession. The next matter to which we have to refer is that when Act XV of 1877 was passed the legislature, still determined, in our opinion, to exclude constructive possession from the possession from which limitation should run under Art. 10, used the term 'physical possession,' and they added a different terminus of limitation in respect of property which did not admit of physical possession.

As we have said, two of the villages here were of pure zemindari tenure, that is, they were villages in which the zemindars got no shares allotted to them by metes and bounds, but held fractional shares in respect of which fractional shares they received a proportionate amount of the profits of the village. It is said that the mortgagor used to receive direct from the tenants of the zemindari body his proportion of the rents payable by them. That, in our opinion, does not alter the case. In Unkur Das v. Narain (I. L. R. 4 All. 24) it was held that a share in an undivided zemindari mahal was not susceptible of physical possession in the sense of Art. 10 of the second schedule to Act No. XV of 1877. We adhere to that decision. The Legislature meant some limitation of the term 'possession' by the use of the term 'physical.' In our opinion, for instance, the owner of a house who has let the house to a tenant cannot be said to be in physical possession of that house so long as the tenancy subsists and his tenant remains in exclusive possession of the demised premises. In such a case the owner has parted with the physical possession to his tenant for the period of his tenancy, and the tenant alone is the person who has physical possession. It appears to us that it would be straining the English language and going contrary to the obvious intention of the legislature to hold otherwise. In this particular case Art. 10 cannot apply, because the whole of the property sold is not capable of physical possession within the meaning of that article, and no instrument of sale has been registered. The result is that Art. 10 not applying Art. 120 must apply in this case. As Art. 120 applies we have got to see when the right to sue accrued to the pre-emptor. That point is concluded by the Full Bench ruling of this Court in Ali Abbas v. Thakur Parsud (I. L. R. 17 All. 105) which, in our opinion, was rightly decided, but which must always be regarded as deciding merely the point referred to the Full Bench, and not the question of limitation. This suit was barred by limitation when brought, and we dismiss this appeal with costs which will include fees on the higher scale."

Mr. Ross for the Appellant in contending that the above decision is erroneous urged that the suit is not barred by limitation because Art. 10 and not Art. 120 applied to this suit, and if Art. 10 did not, Art. 144 is the proper article to apply. And further that even if Art. 120 should be the governing article, the right to sue did not accrue and time did not begin to run until the final decree for possession was passed in favour of the mortgagee. Mr. Ross referred to some of the decisions noticed in the Courts below. He further referred to Starling's Indian Limitation Act, pp. 109 to 111; Directions to revenue officers, N. W. P., Ed. 1858, p. 50; and Forbes v. Amirunnessa (10 Moor's I. A. at p. 349).

No one appeared for the Respondents.

LORD ROBERTSON delivered their Lordships' judgment advising His Majesty that the appeal ought to be dismissed. In conclusion after stating the circumstances the judgment states: "It seemed to their Lordships clear that the expiry of the year of grace was the time at which the pre-emptor's right arose. The mortgagee's right of property had then become mature, and the mere fact that he had not enforced that right by a suit of possession did not affect the question. Their Lordships were satisfied of the soundness of the decision in Ali Abbas v. Thakur Parshad (1. L. R. 14 All. 405)."

Appeal dismissed.

[ON APPEAL FROM THE CALCUTTA HIGH COURT.]

LORD HOBHOUSE	RAJA PADMANUND SINGH and
LORD DAVEY.	others, Plaintiffs, Appellants.
LORD ROBERTSON.
SIR R. COUCH.	MR. G. S. HAYES and others,
1901.	Executors to the estate of
Heard, 19, June.	Balm Dharma Chand Lal, the Judgment,	deceased, Defendants,
13, July.	Respondents.

Construction Gift Agreement - Estate absolute or conditional Vesting of estate Void or voidable.

The High Court had in this appeal reversed the decision of the District Judge of Purneah and decreed to Plaintiff only one-half of the village in suit Alagjhari while the District Judge had decreed the whole of it and Plaintiffs had in their amended plaint claimed the whole.

The facts were that that village and others were given by Raja Lilanund Singh, the Appellant's father, to his daughter Jogmaya Dai absolutely.

The Appellant on coming of age disputed the right of his father to make such gift of ancestral property and brought a suit to contest it. That suit was compromised in 1874, a pattah was granted of the village in dispute to Jogmaya Dai and she in same terms executed a kabuliyat.

The terms of the pattah and kabuliyat were mutatis mutandis as follows:—

I, Kumar Padmanund Singh, also wish that the said Srimati Jogmaya Dai, my sister, and her children should be maintained and supported, and the said Dai also considering the right of me, Kumar Padmanund Singh, and with a view to compromise the suit, consented to relinquish her right which she had acquired under the said deeds sought to be set aside, and a compromise has been effected between us through the intervention of Mr. George Nelson Barlow, C.S.I., Commissioner of Zillah Bhagulpore, to the following effect, viz., the said Srimati Jogmaya Dai shall get an allowance of Rs. 6,000 per annum during her lifetime, and her descendants who may, under the Hindu law, become her heirs, shall get one-half thereof in perpetuity, and in lieu of the same, whatever profits the mouzahs which are held by the said Mussumat Jogmaya Dai under the deeds sought to be set aside may yield annually over and above Rs. 6,000, being fixed as the jumma of those mouzahs, the said mouzahs shall be left in the possession of the said Jogmaya Dai, and on the death of the said Dai one-half of the said mouzahs shall permanently remain in the possession of her descendants, who may be alive at that time and may be (her) heirs according to the Shastras, on a jumma equal to one-half of the said jumma. The person holding possession of the property shall never have any right to alienate, i.e., to effect any sale, gift or mortgage or permanent mukurari of the whole or a portion of the said properties. Therefore, we, the declarants, in effecting and enforcing the said compromise have, of our own free-will and accord, granted this pattah in respect to the said mouzah Dubri Alagjhari, a permanent jagir mehal in pergunnah Powakhali, Zillah Purneah, and the said mouzah Barapati Rahoia, otherwise called Lalgunge, towzi No. 3524, and sudder jumma Rs. 820-3-2 pies within the jurisdiction of the Bhagulpore Collectorate, from 1282 fusi on the annual jumma of Rs. 1,234, by taking a kabuliyat, to Srimati Jogmaya Dai, daughter of me, Raja Lilanund Singh Bahadoor, and sister of me Kumar Padmanund Singh, on the conditions specified below, by cancelling the former settlement and deeds. It is required that the said lessee and her descendants should permanently remain in possession by carrying out the conditions given below, and that they shall never act contrary to this pattah.

"1. Srimati Jogmaya Dai, the lessee, shall remain in possession of the aforesaid properties during her lifetime and pay to us, the declarants and our representatives, Rs. 1,234, the annual jumma as per instalments given below, by taking receipts for the same. On the death of the said lessee, her descendants who may, according to the Shastras, become her heirs, shall permanently remain in possession of one-half of the properties mentioned in the pattah and pay the annual jumma of Rs. 617, year after year as per instalments given below, to us the declarants and our heirs and representatives, and take receipts for the same. The remaining one-half of the properties mentioned in the pattah shall, from the time of the death of the said Srimati Jogmaya Dai, revert to the Raj, and the descendants of the lessee shall not get possession of the same.

"2. The lessee or her descendants, who may come into possession in the manner specified in the preceding paragraph, shall not have any power to transfer the property mentioned in the pattah by sale, gift, mortgage or permanent mukurari or in any other way, and such alienation shall not be valid, and the transferee shall not have any right to hold possession under such transfer.

"3. The amount of jumma which will have to be paid in the manner specified in paragraph 1, shall never be reduced or increased, and we, the declarants, and our representatives shall never interfere in the possession of the lessee and her heirs, who are or will be entitled under the conditions of this pattah; and with the exception of receiving the fixed jumma we, the declarants, or our representatives shall have no further right at all.

"4. If there be no descendants of the lessees, i.e., children born of her womb or their children, we, the declarants and our representatives, have and shall have power to resume and take possession of the remaining one-half of the said mouzals which have been permanently settled for maintenance, and the properties mentioned in the pattah shall revert to the Raj. Be it known that this maintenance has been fixed only for the lessee and her al-aolad (descendants, i.e., children born of her womb) and their descendants, and that the husband of the lessee or stepson or step-daughter of the lessee and other persons, who are not included in the category of the descendants of the lessee as stated above, shall not be entitled to get the said mouzah. But those persons are included in the category of al-aolad (descendants) who are not even the descendants in the first degree, i.e., the descendants of children born of womb also are included in this category, and when there are several descendants, such one or more of them who may be the nearest in relation, according to the Shastras anyone among them whom the lessee or the person holding possession may declare to be the rightful heir, shall be entitled to succeed. But the adopted son or kartaputra is not and shall not be included in the category of descendants.

In June 1885 Jogmaya Dai executed a mortgage of the village in suit to Defendant, Dharm Chand, for an advance of Rs. 20,000 and gave him a lease for 10 years so as to secure to him possession. The lease was benami in the name of two of Dharm Chand's servants.

In 1877 the Respondent, a minor grandson, (daughter's son) Bholanath Jha was born.

Jogmaya Dai died in April 1889. Raja Lilanund Singh died in 1883.

In 1890 the Appellant gave directions to his Patwari that he was to collect rents of  $\frac{1}{2}$  the mouzah which on the death of Jogmaya reverted to the Raj of Banali, that is, the Plaintiffs' Raj.

In 1892 notices were served on the mortgagee intimating that Plaintiffs had come to hear of the said mortgage and lease to Dharm Chand, that they were invalid and informing the mortgagee that they had no right to hold the village under such transfers by Jogmaya Dai. Not receiving satisfaction the present suit was instituted.

The Courts held that the lady had no power to execute those documents and the Plaintiffs were not bound by them.

The High Court on the Defendant Dharm Chand's appeal referring to the said notice issued to the Patwari said:—

"It will be seen from this document that the present Plaintiffs then declared that they were entitled to only eight annas of the rent of the village, and that the remaining eight annas belonged to the descendants of the lady who were bound to hold under the conditions of the lease entered into at the time when the family settlement took place, and to pay their rent into the Plaintiffs' cutchery. The Plaintiffs in that perenna to the Patwari pointed out clearly that from the month of Bysack of the current year, that is, from the beginning of the year, the Patwari should only collect eight annas of the rent due to them, and they directed the Patwari to remit that to the cutchery. They also pointed out how the rent was to be entered in the receipts given to all raiyats, so as to show that the other eight annas belonged to the lady's descendants. This clearly shews that from Bysack, 1297, the Plaintiffs treated the old lease given by them to the lady as an existing lease under which they were entitled to have only eight annas of the rents of the village, and the remainder eight annas remained in possession of her descendants on payment of rent. The Plaintiffs have not contended that they have since then received any conveyance or lease of the remaining eight annas from the descendant of the lady then entitled under the lease."

And they conclude their judgment, which is virtually based on that document, as follows:—

"The Judge in the Court below gave the Plaintiffs possession of the whole village with mesne profits.

"It was argued at the Bar for the Appellant that as the Plaintiffs by their own conduct determined on carrying out the lease, and did carry it out so far as they could, Bholanath should receive eight annas of the rents; and the Plaintiffs not having based their claim on anything done since that year, the Judge in the Court below was wrong in giving them possession and masilat of the whole 16 annas of the village. It was also argued that as Bholanath was admittedly entitled to eight annas share of the rent, the Plaintiffs could only get possession of the remaining eight annas share.

"On the other hand, the Respondents replied by stating that the pattah and kabuliyat entered up in terms of the decree between the three relatives, could not, according to the Hindu law, pass the estate.

"The Respondents did not, nor could they, we think, deny that Bholanath had not in terms of the agreement, an equity against the Plaintiffs to carry out the arrangement.

"We are of opinion that Bholanath, under the terms of the family settlement and the decree passed thereon, had a right to specific performance of the agreement, and to compel the Plaintiffs to give him a legal title, if they refused. But instead of refusing, the Plaintiffs acquiesced in Bholanath's right, treated him as legal owner and gave him possession, so far as they could, by the intimation they gave to the raiyats and servants in 1297. We think, therefore, that the Plaintiffs cannot succeed in getting a declaration that Bholanath cannot now hold the property as the legal owner or that they can dispossess him from his eight annas share.

"We, therefore, cannot agree with the Judge in the Court below in holding that the Plaintiffs are entitled to possession and wasilat of the whole sixteen annas of the property as against Bholanath and the persons connected with the mortgage transaction. We think, however, that they have a right to a declaration that, as against them, the mortgage made by the lady is not binding; and in modification of the decree of the lower Court, we direct that the Plaintiffs be put in possession of eight annas share of the property, with wasilat, according to the amount fixed by the lower Court. Each party to pay his own costs in both Courts."

In this appeal Mr. Mayne and Mr. C. W. Arathoon for the Appellants contended that such decision was erroneous, that on the death of Jogmaya Dai there was no one capable of taking having regard to the terms of the pattah and kubuliyat. The donee must be a person in existence capable of taking when the gift took effect, that condition was not fulfilled in this case. There was no vested interest conferred on anyone of Jogmaya's descendants until her death. Jogmaya Dai was only given a life interest, and there could be no ratification of what was void and not voidable, Maharani Beni Pershad v. Dudnath Roy (26 I. A., p. 16).

Mr. Cowell for the Respondents contended that upon a proper construction of those documents, so long as a lineal descendant of Jogmaya Dai was alive, the Appellants have no right to possession of one moiety of the village, she took an absolute estate of inheritance in that moiety defeasible only on the happening of events which did not occur.

He read passages from the Tagore case (I. A. Supp. Vol., p. 65), cited Bhoban Moy's case (5 I. A., p. 138) and Rao Balwant Singh v. Rani Kishore (25 I. A. at p. 66).

LORD HOBHOUSE to Mr. Cowell.—Is there any reason given by the High Court for disregarding the objection to Bholanath not taking because he was not alive in 1874. I can find none.

Mr. Cowell.—No. Bholanath has a legal title or nothing.

Mr. Mayne replied.

SIR RICHARD COUCH delivered their Lordships' judgment and advised His Majesty to reverse the decree of the High Court and restore that of the District Judge; the Appellants to have the costs in the High Court and of this appeal.

Appeal allowed with costs.

ors., Opposite Party.

Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), sec. 310A—Right of simple mortgagee to apply under sec. 310A to have a sale set aside in execution of a decree for rent—Mortgagee, whether a person whose immoveable property may be said to have been sold.

This case was referred to a Full Bench by Maclean, C. J., and Banerjee, J., on the 8th of March 1901, with the following opinion:—

"One of the questions arising in this rule is, whether a mortgagee of a tenure or holding sold in execution of a decree for arrears of rent due in respect of it, is entitled to make an application under sec. 310A of the Code of Civil Procedure as being a "person whose immoveable property has been sold" within the meaning of that section.

"Upon that question there is, we think, a conflict between the cases of Hamedul Huq v. Matangini Dasi (2 C. W. N., short notes, p. 258), and Nityananda Patra v. Hira Lal Karmakar (5 C. W. N. 63). In our opinion it makes no difference whether the mortgage is a simple mortgage or is one by conditional sale, the real point for consideration being, whether the mortgagee is a person whose immoveable property has been sold, within the meaning of the section.

"There being this conflict of decisions, the question stated above must be referred for determination to a Full Bench; and as the question arises in a rule the whole rule must be so referred:

Held—(RAMPINI, J., dissenting)—That a simple mortgagee of a tenure or holding sold for arrears of rent under the Bengal Tenancy Act can come in and apply under sec. 310A of the Code of Civil Procedure to have the sale set aside.

No. 236 OF 1899.

Defamation—Suit for damages—Privilege—Words spoken at a Police investigation held under the Criminal Procedure Code.

"This was an appeal preferred on the 24th of January 1899, against the decree of Babu Sarbessur Mazumdar, Additional Subordinate Judge of Zillah Julpauri, dated the 10th October 1898, reversing the decree of Babu Kanti Chunder Mukerjee, Munsif of Julpauri, dated the 11th of February 1898.

The question which arose in this appeal was whether the Defendant who, in answer to a question put to him by a police-officer conducting an investigation under the provisions of Act X of 1882, (Criminal Procedure Code), stated that the Plaintiff was concerned in the commission of the crime then being investigated, can be made liable in an action for damages for words so spoken.

The lower Appellate Court held on the authority of Queen-Empress v. Gobinda Pillai (1. L. R. 15 Mad. 235), that no action would under such circumstances lie. Plaintiff preferred this second appeal.

Held—That the Defendant could not be made liable in an action for damages for words so spoken by him and that the suit was not maintainable.

APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE

No. 1328 OF 1899.

RAMPINI, J. } RAM RATTAN PERSHAD,
 GUPTA, J. } Plaintiff, Appellant,
 1901. }
 26, July. } SHEO NANDAN SINGH and others,
 Defendants, Respondents.

Estoppel—Infant representing to be of age—Minor, payment to—Right of minor to recover a sum already paid.

This was an appeal preferred on the 7th of July 1899, against the decree of F. H. Harding, Esq., Judge of Shahabad, dated the 10th April 1899, modifying the decree of Babu Janendra Chunder Banerjee, Munsif of Arrah, Second Court, dated the 16th of July 1898.

The Plaintiff, a minor, sued by his guardian and next friend to recover arrears of rent for the years 1301 to 1303 F. amounting with interest to Rs. 765-4 ans. The Defendants pleaded payment of a great portion of the claim. The first Court found a jurkati (acquittance), purported to have been granted by the late guardian of the Plaintiff for the rent of the year 1301 filed by the Defendants, to be genuine and disallowed the Plaintiff's claim for that year. The first Court also found other receipts filed by the Defendants and alleged by them to have been granted by the Plaintiff for rent paid by them to be genuine, but being of opinion that they could not be regarded as valid receipts, in consequence of the Plaintiff being a minor, it gave the Plaintiff a decree for the full amount of his claim for the other years in suit. Both parties appealed to the lower Appellate Court. As regards Plaintiff's appeal, the lower Appellate Court agreeing with the first Court dismissed it. In the appeal by the Defendants the lower Appellate Court found that the Defendants had succeeded in proving two receipts as being granted by the Plaintiff and that the Plaintiff was in the habit of collecting his own rents. This fact was further supported by the petition which the Plaintiff had filed before the District Judge in which describing himself as over 18 he complained of his guardian, alleging that he took no interest in his affairs including the collections of rent, and asked that he might be allowed to assume the management of his own affairs. The lower Appellate in modifying the decree of the first Court observed as follows:—

"It is highly improbable, if the Plaintiff does not know how to write, that receipts purporting to have been signed by him would have been forged. I have no doubt that the Plaintiff Respondent granted the two receipts mentioned above. I do not agree with the Munsif in his opinion that effect should not be given to the payments acknowledged in these receipts. The plea of minority may be used to protect a minor but not to injure third parties.

"In this case we have a minor, whose guardian resides in Gaya and, according to his own showing, as I have stated above, takes but little interest in his affairs, allowed to go about collecting rent and to grant receipts for the same. Looking to the circumstances of the case, and more particularly the fact that the minor is sufficiently advanced in years to know what he is about, I consider that it would be most inequitable to make the Defendants pay these sums over again.

"The Munsif has rightly excluded Ex. B5 in consequence of it not being stamped and Exs. B6 and C are only chittas and not receipts.

"The sums of Rs. 125 and 99 mentioned above will be deducted from the Plaintiff's claim, and the Plaintiff will get a decree for the balance due for the years 1302 and 1303 F. only."

Plaintiff preferred this second appeal.

Held—That the Plaintiff who is a minor, suing through his guardian was not entitled to recover again from the Defendants the money paid by the Defendants to the minor himself and that there was an estoppel by his conduct to prevent the minor, even through his guardian, to recover the sums which clearly were paid to him by the Defendants.

Their LORDSHIPS in delivering judgment remarked as follows:—

The guardian chose to neglect his duty, and the minor went about collecting rent and representing himself to the Court to be over eighteen years of age and competent to manage his own affairs. This amounted to a virtual representation on his part that he was of full age and entitled to collect rent; and it would be very inequitable in these circumstances to allow the Plaintiff to recover the above sums again.

Moulvie Mahomed Yuseof Khan Bahadur for the Appellant.

Babu Suligram Singh for the Respondents.

Appeal dismissed.

APPEAL FROM ORDER

*Nos. 267 and 291 to 295 of 1900.

MACLEAN, C. J. KEDAR NATH CHATTERJEE,
BANERJEE, J. Judgment-debtor, Appellant,
1901. v.
31. July. ARDHA CHANDRA ROY CHOWDHURY, Decree-holder, Respondent.

Bengal Tenancy Act, Sch. III, Art. 6—Limitation—Execution of decree for arrears of rent by a co-sharer landlord—Limitation Act (XV of 1877), Sch. II, Art. 179.

This was an appeal preferred on the 16th of July 1900, against an order of F. E. Largeter, Esq., District Judge of Zillah 24-Pergunnahs, dated the 15th May 1900, affirming an order of Babu Amrita Lal Mukerjee, Munsif, 3rd Court at Alipur, dated the 14th February 1900.

The principal question which arose for decision in these appeals was as follows:—

Whether an application for the execution of a decree obtained by one of two or more joint landlords for his share of the rent, is governed by the special rule of limitation laid down in Art. 6 of Sch. III of the Bengal Tenancy Act, or by the general law of limitation, namely, Art. 179 of the second schedule of Act XV of 1877.

For the Appellant it was mainly contended that a suit by one of several joint landlords for his share of the rent, being a suit between landlord and tenant, is a suit under the Bengal Tenancy Act, and a decree made in such a suit is a decree under that Act, although certain provisions of the Act, namely, those relating to the sale of tenures and holding in execution of rent decrees, may not apply to such a decree. It was contended that if the special law of limitation did not apply anomalous results would follow, such as this, that whereas a rent decree for a sum not exceeding 500 rupees obtained by all the landlords jointly must be completely executed within three years, a co-sharer landlord obtaining such a decree could keep it alive for 12 years. Secs. 143 and 144 of the Bengal Tenancy Act were relied upon. The following cases were cited:—

Prem Chand v. Mukhoda (I. L. R. 14 Cal. 201), Narain Makton v. Manaji Patil (I. L. R. 17 Cal. 489), and Parameshvara v. Kali Mohan (4 C. W. N. 801 : s. c. I. L. R. 28 Cal. 127).

On the other hand on behalf of the Respondent it was contended that the only rent decrees which could be treated as decrees under the Bengal Tenancy Act were decrees obtained by the entire body of landlords; that a decree obtained by one of several joint landlords for his share in the rent was one obtained independently of that Act; and that the anomaly pointed out by the other side might be explained by the fact that a co-sharer landlord cannot obtain satisfaction of his rent decree by the sale of the tenure or holding in arrear, and the Legislature might in consideration of that fact have thought it fit to allow him a longer time for realising the amount of his decree. Sec. 188 of the Bengal Tenancy Act was also relied upon.

The following cases were cited:—

Beni Madhub v. Jodu Lal (I. L. R. 17 Cal. 390), Durga Churn v. Kuli Prasanna (3 C. W. N. 586 : s. c. I. L. R. 26 Cal. 727), and Sudagor v. Kristo Chunder (3 C. W. N. 742 : s. c. I. L. R. 26 Cal. 937).

Held—That an application for the execution of a decree obtained by one of two or more joint landlords for his share of the rent, is not governed by the special rule of limitation laid down in Art. 6 of Sch. III of the Bengal Tenancy Act, but by the general law of limitation, namely, Art. 179 of Sch. II of Act XV of 1877.

Prem Chand v. Mukhoda (I. L. R. 14 Cal. 201), Jugobundhu v. Jadu Ghosh (I. L. R. 15 Cal. 47), Beni Madhub v. Jodu Lal (I. L. R. 17 Cal. 390), Durga Churn v. Kuli Prasanna (3 C. W. N. 586 : s. c. I. L. R. 26 Cal. 727), and Parameshvara v. Kali Mohan (4 C. W. N. 801 : s. c. I. L. R. 28 Cal. 127) referred to.

Babus Suroda Churn Mitter and Sharosi Churn Mitter for the Appellant in No. 267.

Babus Nilmadhub Bose and Benode Behary Mukerji for the Respondent.

Babu Shurosi Churn Mitter for the Appellant in Nos 291 to 295.

Babu Benode Behari Mukerjee for Respondent.

Appeal dismissed.

RAJSHAHY GROUP.—Mr. Justice Hill and Mr. Justice Taylor.

PATNA AND BURDWAN GROUPS.—Mr. Justice Rampini and Mr. Justice Gupta.

PRIVY COUNCIL DEPARTMENT.—The Hon'ble the Chief Justice and Mr. Justice Banerjee.

Mr. Justice Ameer Ali and Mr. Justice Sale will sit singly on the Original Side.

WE VERY MUCH REGRET THAT AN ERROR IN RESPECT of the name of the successful Appellant to His Majesty in Council in the Military Account Extortion case crept into the last issue of our Journal from the columns of a contemporary to whom we are indebted for the telegraphic message. In all our previous issues the Appellant is correctly described as N. A. Subramania Iyer (see notes 5 C. W. N. 269 and C. W. N., pp. 209, 212).

IT WILL APPEAR FROM A LETTER WHICH WE PUBLISH IN another column that Sir V. Bhashyam Iyengar took his seat on the Bench at the Madras High Court on the very day that a telegraphic message was received by the Madras Government from the Secretary of State of India announcing that the letters patent of his office had been issued. Before that Sir Bhashyam could not surely take his seat on the Bench or give up his practice on the strength of newspaper announcements. We understand also that Lord Davey practised at the Bar for a short time after his appointment as a Lord Justice.

WE HAVE BEEN ASKED BY A CORRESPONDENT TO CITE the authority on which we made the statement that judges in former times used sometimes to revert to the Bar. A note on this point will be found in Fitz James Stephen's History of Criminal Law, Vol. 1, p. 452. He goes so far as to say that he knows of no legal reasons why a judge should not revert to the Bar if he liked. There can be no legal objections to such a course but still it may be questioned how far it would be consistent with the dignity of the Bench or the prestige of a judge that he should after a long judicial career come back to the Bar in expectation of professional gains. But when a judge is improperly dismissed or resigns of account of any difference with the Government or his colleagues, there can be no objection to his joining the Bar. Nor can there be any objection to a member of the Bar reverting to the ranks of the profession after officiating on the Bench for a short time. At the Calcutta Bar, Sir Charles Paul and Mr. Kennedy both reverted to the Bar although at the close of their temporary terms of office they were offered permanent judgeships.

IT WILL BE AN IRREPARABLE LOSS TO THE JUDICIAL Committee and to us, who are deeply interested in the efficiency of the final Court of Appeal from India, if it be true that Lord Hobhouse intends to retire from next term. His Lordship's judgments may be taken as the very model of what Appeal Court judgments should be. They review both facts and law on broad lines and the conclusions to which they arrive commend themselves both to the legal and the lay mind. In pointing out the error of lower Courts, his Lordship never forgets the dignity of the Board or of his position there and takes care not to make use of any expression likely to compromise the judges below before the public.

WE HOPE THAT THE GAP OCCASIONED BY THE RETIREMENT of Lord Hobhouse will not be filled by Sir John Edge. Sir John is said to be a persona grata with the India Office and judging from the manner in which the councillors of our Secretary of State have been playing with judicial appointments in India nothing would seem to be impossible for them. But they would be surpassing themselves if, as rumour has it, they should really entertain the idea of putting Sir John Edge in the Judicial Committee. We have seldom come across a member of the legal profession who relies on any of Sir John Edge's decisions. The very mention of a judgment coming from such a source raises almost a legal presumption in India that it is erroneous, unless the contrary is shown. There has never been a Chief Justice in India whose decisions have been so often upset by the Judicial Committee and treated with such scant courtesy. For handy reference we may refer to Mathura Das v. Raja Narindra (1 C. W. N. 52: s. c. L. R. 23 I. A. 138) and in particular to the observation of their Lordships of the Privy Council made therein. One peculiarity of the errors by the Ex-chief Justice was that they used to contravene often the most elementary propositions of law. It was not only the Judicial Committee that had to nullify the 'evil effects' of his decisions but the Indian Legislature had also sometimes to step in and rectify its absurd results by express legislation. In view of such facts we cannot but treat the rumour, that has found currency in this country owing no doubt to Sir John Edge being appointed to represent India in the Colonial Commission for the Imperial Court of Appeal, that he may be chosen to represent India in the Final Court of Appeal as utterly absurd.

WE FEEL AS IF THE VACATION HAD COMMENCED. Two of the judges on the Appellate Side have gone home on privilege leave. Mr. Justice Stanley also left Calcutta last Thursday to take his seat as the Chief Justice of the Allahabad High Court. During the better part of last week only one judge sat on the Original Side. During the present, although there may be two Courts sitting on the Original Side yet none but urgent and short matters are likely to be taken up before the long vacation. The business on the Appellate Side in the absence of two judges on leave and one engaged in the Court of Sessions is hardly likely to be more brisk.

THE CASE OF Kazi Zeanuddin, REPORTED IN THIS issue at p. 772, is of great moment to the landholders. It decides in fact that an absentee landholder may be fined under sec. 154 of the Penal Code for any riot committed by his agent even in the absence of any proof, evidence or presumption that it was done to his knowledge. The decision seems to be based on a misconception of the scope of sec. 154. The object of the section is to secure information of a riot at the earliest moment with a view to prevent or suppress it. Sec. 154 attaches a liability to fine of an absentee landlord for any default of his local agent in this respect. But when the local agent is himself charged with having caused a riot and absconded and it is not alleged that his master living at a distance of two days' journey by foot had any knowledge of it, we may doubt whether sec. 154 can have any application.

The view taken by Mr. Justice Ameer Ali, that when the agent is himself accused of a crime his principal cannot be made liable but for its abetment, commends itself to us. It is a fundamental principle of criminal law that no agent can be presumed to have authority of his principle for the commission of an offence and that for the former's criminal acts the latter cannot be made liable except on a charge of abetment. The hardship in this case seems to us to be all the greater as it appears from the facts of the case that the object of the agent in creating this riot was to punish a tenant who had complained to his landlord against the agent and that the latter had some other personal grievance against the tenant to retaliate. Both in point of fact as also of law, sec. 154 seems to us to have no bearing on cases of this kind.

Correspondence.

[TO THE EDITOR OF THE "CALCUTTA WEEKLY NOTES."]

SIR,—Will you permit me to point out that the letter of "Lawyer" published by you in your issue of the 29th ultimo proceeds on an entire misconception of the facts in regard to the appointment of Sir V. Bhashyam Iyengar as a judge of the High Court. "Lawyer" assumes that Sir V. Bhashyam Iyengar had been appointed a judge of the High Court and that he could have taken his seat on the Bench on the reopening of the Court, but that he deferred doing so in order to fulfil certain professional engagements at the Bar. But the real facts are otherwise. It is true that in the newspapers it was announced that Sir V. Bhashyam Iyengar has been appointed a judge, and it was also expected that he would be appointed. But "Lawyer" ought to know that a newspaper announcement possesses no legal value whatever and that in the case of judges of the High Court the appointment has to be made by Letters Patent and that it does not take effect until the issue of the Letters Patent is duly notified in this country. In the case of the preceding appointment to the Madras High Court, so far as my memory goes, this provision of law appears to have been altogether overlooked and I do not remember that in the case of any previous appointment to the High Court the issue of the Letters Patent was duly notified. In the case of Sir V. Bhashyam Iyengar, however, it was only by a Gazette Extraordinary issued on the 1st instant that the Local Government notified that intimation was received from the Secretary of State that Letters Patent had been issued. If the ordinary course of things it would have taken some weeks at least for the Letters Patent to arrive in this country and thereafter to be notified here; but to expedite matters the Local Government appears to have, at the instance of Sir Bhashyam Iyengar himself, obtained telegraphic intimation of the issue of the Letters Patent from the Secretary of State and acted upon such intimation.

Under these circumstances it must be clear that it was not, until the 1st instant, that Sir V. Bhashyam Iyengar was in a position to assume charge of his office and he did so on that very day. The query as to the propriety of his practising at the Bar after the appointment, meaning thereby the announcement in the newspapers, was therefore altogether uncalled for. So long as a judge elect cannot legally assume charge of his office, it is difficult to comprehend why he should not continue to fulfil his professional engagements at the Bar. The fact that Sir V. Bhashyam Iyengar did not actually appear in any case in Court was due to the circumstance that no important case of his was posted in the cause-list after the reopening of the Court.

The facts of this case are stated at pp. lviii and lix of Vol. 5, C. W. N.

Their Lordships to-day delivered their judgment unanimously agreeing to allow the appeal, reverse the decision of the Court of Appeal and restore that of Mr. Justice Farwell. In delivering judgment the Lord Chancellor said he found no satisfactory answer given by the Court of Appeal to the judgment of Mr. Justice Farwell "with which his Lordship entirely concurred. "If the legislature has created a thing which can own property, which can employ servants, which can inflict injury, it must be taken I think to have impliedly given the power to make it sueable in a Court of law for injuries purposely done by its authority and procurement."

HOUSE OF LORDS.—THE GREAT WESTERN RAILWAY COMPANY v. LONDON AND COUNTY BANKING CO. Before the LORD CHANCELLOR, LORDS SHAND, DAVEY, BRAMPTON and LINDLEY. 22nd July 1901.

Bill of Exchange Act, 1882, secs. 81 and 82—Cheques crossed "not negotiable."

For the facts of this case, see 5 C. W. N., p. ccix.

This was the appeal of the Railway Co. against the decision of the Court of Appeal made in favour of the Bank.

The LORD CHANCELLOR in delivering judgment, moving their Lordships to allow the appeal, rested his decision on the true construction of the above statute, although his Lordship said that there was another and quite a distinct ground for deciding against the Bank. Every one, his Lordship said, should know that people who take a cheque marked "not negotiable" and treat it as a negotiable security, do so taking the risk of the person, for whom they negotiate it, having no title to it, and in this case it cannot be pretended that Huggins had any title to it. Their Lordships inter alia held that the argument that although the Bank had a defective title to the cheque, they have a good title to the money paid to them as holders of it, was opposed to the meaning of the above-mentioned sections of the Act and would destroy the utility of sec. 81. The language of the statute would be defeated by deciding that a fraudulent holder of the cheque could give a title either to the cheque or the money.

Huggins was not a customer of the Bank, and the transaction was not a banking transaction within the meaning of the sec. 82, and it was not correct to say that the Banker is here sought to be made liable by reason of his having received payment for a customer. The Bank obtained payment of the cheque for themselves and not for Huggins.

Mr. Greene, K. C., Mr. Asquith, K. C., and Mr. P. Goff for the Appellants.

Mr. Lawrence, K. C., and Mr. Lushington for the Respondents.

PRIVY COUNCIL.

[APPEAL FROM THE MADRAS HIGH COURT.]

LORD HOBHOUSE.

LORD DAVEY.

LORD ROBERTSON.

SIR R. COUCH.

1901.

Heard, 18, June.

Judgment, 13, July.

RUNGAYYA GOUNDAN & Co.,
Plaintiffs, Appellants,

v.
NANJAPPA RAO and others,
Defendants, Respondents.

Contract—Specific performance—Res judicata—Secs. 13, 43, Civil Procedure Code.

This was an appeal against a decree of the Madras High Court which reversed the decree of the Sub-Judge of Ootacamund.

The undisputed facts are:—

Before 23rd March 1891 the Respondents (who are brothers and members of a joint Hindu family subject to the Mitakshara law of which family the first Defendant is the manager) were the owners of a coffee estate in the Nilgiri Hills known as "The Tudor Valley Estate" which they had mortgaged to Sir E. Gore Langton by two mortgages for the sums of Rs. 25,000 and 10,000 respectively.

On the 23rd of March 1891 the Appellants and the Respondents entered into an agreement for the sale of the said estate by the Respondents to the Appellants for the sum of Rs. 77,500 upon the terms following:—

Rs.

The agreement recited that the Appellants had already paid to the Respondents in advance the sum of ...

7,500 0 0

That the Respondents guaranteed a crop for the then current season of 30 tons of coffee, and agreed that the Appellants should retain in their hands as a guarantee for such crop the sum of ...

10,000 0 0

That the Appellants should pay the said mortgagee ...

25,000 0 0

	Rs.
Making a total in all of the sum of ... ..	42,500	0 0
And should pay the remaining balance of ... ..	35,000	0 0
Making up the full consideration
of ... ..	77,500	0 0
between the 1st of April 1891 and the 31st of July 1891.

There were further conditions fixing penalties on either side in case of default and providing that the expenditure upon the estate should be provided by the Appellants, but that possession of the said estate should in order to protect the said two mortgages continue until the 31st July 1891 with the Respondents whose manager was, however, to be subject to the directions and control of the Appellants and to carry out their orders.

The Appellants accordingly entered upon what was practically the full possession of the said estate and by their own servants cultivated and managed the same, provided and made all necessary expenditure and gathered the said guaranteed crop.

Some delay in completing the said transaction arose by reason of difficulties in obtaining the title-deeds of the said property which were with the said mortgagee. Eventually, however, towards the latter part of August 1891 the said mortgages were paid off and other payments were made bringing the total payments made by the Appellants to the Respondents or as they directed to Rs. 44,420 and leaving a balance of Rs. 33,080 payable by the Appellants to the Respondents in respect of the price of the said estate.

On the 22nd or 23rd of August the Appellants having had the necessary conveyance prepared submitted the same to the first Respondent who is found to have been as aforesaid the managing member of the Respondents' family and the same was by him signed on behalf of himself and the other Respondents in token of his approval.

The said conveyance was then after engrossment forwarded to the Respondents for execution and was retained by them but they did not execute the same.

On the 5th September 1891 the first Respondent wrote to the Appellants as follows "Within five days from this date you should according to agreement complete the document, attend the Registrar's Office with money, get the registration effected and take over possession of the estate. If you fail I hereby positively make known to you that we will make (you) liable to the penalty as per stipulations mentioned in the agreement."

Further correspondence passed between the respective parties and the Respondents while still retaining possession of the conveyance which had been presented to them for execution wrote on the 11th of September 1891 a letter to the Appellants as follows :—

"Dear Sirs,

Re TUDOR VALLEY ESTATE.

"As you have not completed this business within the further time given you in my letter of the 5th instant, I have decided to act in accordance with the agreement between us dated the 23rd March last. I am giving instructions to my Superintendent for the carrying on of the estate work and write to request you or your people not to interfere with the property."

On the same date the Appellants wrote to the Respondents maintaining that the conveyance which they had forwarded for execution and which the Respondents had retained correctly carried out the terms of the said agreement and asking that the same should be returned to them and proposing that the same should be compared with the draft conveyance which had as aforesaid been approved by the Respondents in the presence of "four respectable parties two on each side" and requiring the Respondents to carry out the terms of the said agreement.

On the said 11th of September the first Respondent proceeded to the said estate and reaching the same at night ejected the Appellants' servants who reported such proceedings to the Appellants who took proceedings before the Magistrate against the first Respondent.

Pending such criminal proceedings the following litigation upon which this appeal turns took place between the parties.

The Respondents filed on the 21st September 1891 Suit No. 55 of 1891 against the Appellants.

In the plaint in such suit the present Respondents after reciting the said agreement of the 23rd March 1891 and their contention that the present Appellants had failed to carry out the terms of the said agreement stated that on the 11th of September 1891 they had written the letter of that date hereinbefore set out, that on the 15th of the said month of September these Appellants had instituted a criminal charge for trespass and rioting against the first Respondent and had on the 16th September re-entered upon the said estate and ejected the Respondents therefrom and had then and there taken possession of the said estate which possession they had ever since retained well knowing that they had "no right or excuse for so doing" and the Respondents prayed that the Court would be pleased "to put them into possession" of the said estate and grant them such further and other relief as the circumstances of the case might justify.

The Respondents immediately upon the filing of the said plaint applied for an interim injunction which was granted ex parte but was afterwards dissolved.

The Appellants filed in due course their written statement in the said case No. 55 of 1891 in which after setting out the facts of the case down to the ouster of these Appellants by the Respondents on the 11th of September as aforesaid they proceeded as follows: the words within brackets being written in pencil in the original.

"11. Defendants are willing to abide by the terms of the said agreement which provide that Plaintiffs' Superintendent or writer shall continue on the said estate as well as in other respects and submit that as the said agreement between the parties amply provides for matters of possession and inspection of crop there is no necessity whatever for any intervention by the Court on those matters and (further urges that) the Court cannot in this suit set aside or supersede any such provisions between the parties.

"12. The letter, dated the 11th day of September 1891, from first Plaintiff to Defendants received by Defendants on the 12th September 1891 shows that Plaintiffs were not on the 11th of September working the estate but that Defendants were working and were in possession of the estate (and that the Plaintiffs intended to interrupt the status quo which they subsequently did).

"13. (The Defendants do not allege that they were) in complete possession as they were not clothed with the title nor had they received the conveyance agreed to be given by the Plaintiffs nor had the former writer withdrawn from the estate (or the question of the crop been settled).

"14. Defendants have sustained expense and injury by reason of Plaintiffs' wrongful application for (and obtaining an) injunction (as their enjoyment and working of the estate and disposal of the crop has been interfered with whilst their credit and reputation has to some extent been damaged and the time of themselves and their servants has been taken up at a critical juncture in attending Court proceedings) and Defendants pray that the Court will award them Rs. 1,000 as compensation on account thereof."

The Appellants further on the 23rd of September 1891 filed their plaint in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of the Nilgiris in original Suit 73 of 1891 against the Respondents seeking damages for the said trespass and ouster and asking for restoration to possession and for an injunction.

On the 16th December 1891 the Respondents filed their written statement in the said suit denying the Appellants' right to any damages and setting up their own rights.

On the 7th March 1892 the Appellants filed a further written statement in the said case.

Upon such pleadings the following issues were settled for trial in the respective cases. In Suit No. 55 of 1891 the issues were:—

1. What possession of the plaint land are either of the parties in this suit entitled to by reason of the terms of the agreement of March 23rd 1891?

2. Have the terms of the agreement of March 31st 1891 as to the right of possession which it conferred on either party hereto been subsequently varied in any way, if so how?

3. Whether Defendants have unlawfully dispossessed Plaintiffs of the plaint property.

4. Whether Plaintiffs are entitled to possession of the plaint property.

5. Whether Defendants are entitled to the whole or any portion of the compensation they claim.

In Suit No. 73 of 1891 in which the Appellants were Plaintiffs the issues settled were—

1. Whether Plaintiffs can obtain compensation in this case, if so to what extent?

2. Whether the Plaintiffs were in possession of plaint premises at the time of filing their suit and if so how and to what extent their prayer for possession in this suit can be granted?

3. Whether for any reason Plaintiffs are entitled to the injunction they ask.

By agreement both the said suits were tried upon the same evidence.

On the 10th day of August 1893 the Subordinate Judge who tried both the said cases delivered a separate judgment in each.

In Suit 55 of 1891, he held upon the first issue that the Plaintiffs, the present Respondents, were entitled to have possession of the said estate until the sale agreed upon in the agreement of 23rd March 1891 should be carried out and effected; upon the second issue, that the terms of the said agreement so far as they related to the right of possession of the said estate had not been subsequently varied; upon the third issue, that these Appellants had unlawfully dispossessed the Respondents; upon the fourth issue, that the Respondents were entitled to possession; and upon the fifth issue he held that these Appellants were entitled to the costs of resisting the Respondents' application for an injunction which they had made in the said suit.

By his judgment in the Suit No. 73 of 1891 in which these Appellants were the Plaintiffs he held upon the issues as follows:—

On the first issue, that the Plaintiffs, these Appellants, were not entitled to any compensation; on the second issue, that as these Appellants were in fact in possession and also because they were not entitled to possession they were not entitled to a decree for possession; and on the third issue, that these Appellants were entitled to a temporary injunction restraining the Respondents from interfering with their management of the said estate.

The decrees of the Subordinate Judge giving effect to his said judgments are dated the said 10th day of August 1892.

Against such decree the Appellants appealed to the Court of the District Judge, the appeal in Suit No. 55 of 1891 being numbered as Appeal Suit 837 and the Appeal in No. 73 of 1891 being numbered as Appeal Suit No. 838 both of 1892.

One judgment was delivered by the District Judge in both the said appeals on the 11th of October 1893.

He agreed with the findings of fact arrived at by the first Court and upheld the decrees of the lower Court in both suits save that he altered the terms of the injunction issued in Suit No. 73 of 1891. He held that the said injunction went beyond the terms of the Agreement of the 23rd of March 1891 and he accordingly altered it so, as in his opinion, would carry into effect the terms of the said Agreement making it an injunction restraining the vendors, the present Respondents, from working the said estate otherwise than as the vendees might appoint unless and until the said Agreement of the 23rd March 1891 should be rescinded or superseded by agreement of the parties or should be declared or should become invalid by due course of law.

The decrees in the said appeals are dated the said 11th day of October 1893.

Against such decrees an appeal, it would appear, had been preferred by these Appellants to the High Court of Madras but nothing seems to have been done in the same.

THE PRESENT SUIT.

On the 14th November 1893, the vendees instituted O. S. 107 of 1893 in the Subordinate Court of the Nilgiris against the vendors. They claimed specific performance of the contract of 23rd May, 1891, for sale of the Tudor Valley Coffee Estate, and also damages for its breach, or in the alternatives damages for breach of contract and cancellation of the agreement and a return of the sums paid in anticipation of its fulfilment, with all these securities and remedies for the repayment of such money as are provided by the Transfer of Property Act, IV of 1882.

The Defendants filed a written statement in which they denied the Plaintiffs' right to specific performance or to damages, and attributed the non-completion of the agreement to their own dilatory and wrongful conduct, and asserted that they had improperly taken possession of the estate without tendering the draft agreement asked for or payment of the balance of the purchase-money. They also relied on the decisions given in their favour in the suits above stated.

The issues raised numerous questions of law and fact arising out of the allegations on either side.

On the 28th April, 1894, the Original Court directed that the Plaintiffs should pay into Court Rs. 28,050, being the balance of the purchase-money after deducting Rs. 5,000 awarded as damages, and that they should submit to the Court a conveyance which upon approval by the Court the Defendants were to execute.

In the judgment the Judge first dealt with and rejected a plea based on the effect of the decision in O. S. 73 of 1891 as a bar to the present suit under s. 43 of the Civil Procedure Code. He then decided that the insertion of penalties payable by either party on breach of the contract did not prevent the grant of specific performance.

In dealing with the question of revocation he considered that both parties were willing to go on with the agreement up to the 5th September, and that the notice given by the Defendants on that day requiring completion on the 10th was unreasonable and insufficient. He held that the Defendants were not justified in revoking the contract, and that it was not revoked by the judgments in Appeal Suits 837 and 838 above referred to.

He then proceeded to consider the question of damages which he fixed at the sum of Rs. 5,000.

The Defendants appealed against this decree and judgment to the High Court, which pronounced its judgment on the 21st October, 1895. It agreed with the Subordinate Judge in holding that up to the 5th September any delay on the Defendants' part was waived and said as to the letter of that date: "We do not think this can be treated as a notice to rescind or that, if it could be so read, the Defendants were then, on account of delay on the Plaintiffs' part, entitled to give suit notice." The decision of the Court which was given against the Plaintiffs was based upon their conduct in the suits of 1891, and the effect of those decrees as resulting from that conduct. They say:—

"In our opinion, however, the omission of the Plaintiffs to insist on their right under the contract when attacked by the Defendants in the suit of 1891 is fatal to the present claim.

"The Suit No. 55 was brought by Nanjappa and his partner to recover possession of the estate.

"It was in effect alleged in the plaint that the contract of sale had gone off owing to the default of the purchasers. The purchasers in their written statement rightly insisted on the existence of the contract, and alleged their possession in pursuance of it.

"The finding was that the purchasers had previously to the 11th September, 1891, when their servants were ejected by the vendors, practically been in possession of the estate. This is what the Plaintiffs themselves say in their present plaint, and there is no doubt that it was the fact. Their possession, whether joint with the vendors or exclusive, was possession granted to them as purchasers, and it is immaterial that the written contract did not provide for it. This being so, the answer which the Plaintiffs made to the claim as against them in the suit of 1891 was a good answer. Being thus entitled to specific performance of the contract on payment of the balance due, they were entitled to say that their possession was lawful. They could not say they actually had a good title to the property, but they could say that it was owing to the default of the vendors in not executing a conveyance that their title was not completed. The existence of the contract was a matter which might and ought to have been made a ground of defence in the suit of 1891. It makes no difference that the defence was raised and was overruled, for presumably it would not have been overruled if the facts had been established by proper evidence. It follows, therefore, that the question of the contract must be held to be res judicata, and the suit so far as it seeks specific performance must fail.

"Another and independent ground on which, we think, the Plaintiffs' suit must fail is that the cause of action on which their suit is based is identical with that on which they based their suit in 1891. The Subordinate Judge considers that this latter suit was simply a suit for disturbance of possession, but, looking at the plaint and comparing it with the plaint in the present suit, we find that the material allegations in the two plaints are alike. In both the Plaintiffs assert the existence of the contract and possession taken by them under it.

"In support of their claim in 1891 the Plaintiffs had to adduce, and did adduce, the evidence relating to the contract which they have adduced in the present suit."

"Thus another test of the identity of the causes of action is satisfied (see cases cited in Brunsdan v. Humphreys (14 Q. B. D., p. 145). Possibly, the Plaintiffs might, in the former suit, have relied on the mere fact of their possession and might not then have been precluded from bringing the present suit, but they did not reserve the contract as a ground for another suit. They put it in issue in 1891 and founded upon it their claim for possession. In the present suit they seek to put it in issue again and found upon it a claim for specific performance. The relief which they ask for is different, but the fundamental facts giving them a cause of action are identical in the two cases."

The Court then proceeded to say that the decree for specific performance must be set aside, but that the Plaintiffs were entitled to recover all sums paid by them as purchase-money with interest. Against this, however, were to be set the profits received by them during their possession. To ascertain these the Judge was directed to take an account and record a finding.

Upon the account the Sub-Judge found that the Defendants owed the Plaintiffs nothing. That finding was accepted by the High Court, and the present Appellants have for the purposes of the appeal to His Majesty agreed that no objection shall be taken to it.

The result was that the appeal to the High Court was allowed and the suit was dismissed with costs.

Since the decision of the High Court the present Appellants have sued the Respondents in O. S. 74 of 1896 and obtained a decree against them for the amount of the mortgage held by Sir Gore Langton with interest and costs.

Mr. Branson for the Appellants contended that the High Court was wrong in deciding that this suit was barred by sec. 13 of the Civil Procedure Code, and they were further wrong in holding that the suit was barred under the provisions of sec. 43 of that Code.

He referred to the following authorities, Parvatum Gir's case (26 I. A. 175 at p. 183), Sheo Sojan Singh (24 I. A. 50 at p. 58), Brunsdan v. Humphreys, (14 Q. B. D. (1884), p. 141).

Mr. Mayne for the Respondents urged that the High Court was right in the view it took of the effect of the litigation of 1891 and that by the subsequent proceedings taken in 1896 the Appellants had disabled themselves from carrying out the contract which they were now claiming to enforce.

In this case the High Court of Madras had held that the suit was not maintainable on two grounds: first, because the matter was res judicata, and secondly, because the case fell within sec. 43 of the Civil Procedure Code.

LORD HOBHOUSE in delivering their Lordships' judgment stated that as to the first ground there was great difficulty looking to the frame of the suits of 1891 and at the judgments by which they were concluded; and as their Lordships were in entire accord with the High Court on the 2nd point, they need not arrive at any decision on the first point.

It was on the 2nd ground, viz., that of bar under sec. 43, C. P. C., that His Majesty was advised to dismiss the appeal with costs.

Mr. Branson for the Appellants.

Mr. Mayne for the Respondents.

APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE

NO. 1433 OF 1898.

RAMPINI, J.

GUTTA, J.

2, August.

BABU JANKI DAS, Plaintiff,
Appellant,

RAM GOLAM SAHA and others,
Defendants, Respondents.

Public Demands Recovery Act (I of 1895, B. C.), sec. 10, 21, before amendment by Act I of 1897—Right of suit—Suit to set aside sale—Notice, non service of—Irregularity—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), sec. 244.

This appeal arose out of a suit to set aside a sale held in execution of a certificate issued by the Collector. Plaintiff alleged that he was a co-sharer along with Defendants Nos. 1 and 3 in a certain garden which had been sold at a very inadequate price in execution of a certificate for arrears of cesses, and had been purchased by Defendant No. 1 in the name of his gomastha and son-in-law, Defendant No. 2. It was stated that no notice under sec. 10 of the Act was issued to the Plaintiff, that the proceedings connected with the sale were irregular, that Defendant No. 1 who was the real purchaser and who along with Defendant No. 3 was jointly liable with the Plaintiff for the debt, was bound in equity to reconvey to the Plaintiff the Plaintiff's share in it which was sold.

Both the lower Courts decided that the suit was not maintainable, as the suit was not one to set aside the certificate and as the certificate had become absolute, no steps having been taken to cancel it within the time prescribed by the law for the purpose; they held the sale could not be set aside.

Plaintiff preferred this second appeal.

On behalf of the Appellant it was contended (1) that the suit was maintainable as the allegation was that no notice under sec. 10 of the Act was served, and that this question ought to have been enquired into; (2) that there were irregularities in the sale, and (3) that if the Defendant No. 2 is the benamidar of the Defendant No. 1, the latter was bound to reconvey the property sold to the Plaintiff.

The argument on behalf of the Respondent material to this report was that the suit was barred by sec. 244 which was applicable to the case under sec. 21 of Act I of 1895, B. C.

Held—That the law applicable in this case is Act I of 1895 and the wording of sec. 10 in this Act and Act VII of 1880, B. C., is almost identical, and there was therefore no ground for distinguishing the present case from those of Chandra Kumar Mukherjee v. Secretary of State (I. L. R. 27 Cal. 698) and Ram Tarak Hazra v. Dilwar Ali (5 C. W. N. 521) which no doubt were cases under Act VII of 1880, B. C., and therefore the suit was maintainable.

That the law applicable is sec. 21 of Act I of 1895 before its amendment by Act I of 1897 and therefore sec. 244 applied only so far as the procedure to be followed in execution proceedings to enforce the certificate and realise the amount thereunder is concerned, and that it was not applicable in its entirety and did not apply so as to bar a separate suit for setting aside the sale.

Ram Tarak Hazra v. Dilwar Ali (5 C. W. N. 521) relied upon.

Dr. Asutosh Mukherjee for the Appellant.

Babu Shoroshi Charan Mitter for the Respondent.

APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE

No. 887 of 1899.

RADHA RAMAN CHOWDHURY,

Plaintiff, Appellant,

RAMINI, J.

BHOWANI PRASAD BHOWMIK,

Defendant, Respondent.

Evidence Act (I of 1872), sec. 92—Contemporaneous oral agreement—Registered document, terms of, whether can be proved to have been varied or altered by oral agreement—Acts and conduct of parties—Rate of rent, reduction of—Subsequent acceptance at low rates—Waiver.

This was an appeal preferred on the 8th of May 1899, against the decree of A. F. Steinberg, Esq., District Judge of Zillah Rajshahye, dated the 13th of January 1899, reversing the decree of Babu Mohim Chandra Sarkar, Munsif of Boalia, dated the 9th of September 1898.

The facts of the case as stated in the judgment of the Munsif were as follows:—

The plaint states that one Krishna Prosanna Chowdhury, proprietor of 1 anna 4 gundas and 11 kags share of Mouzah Chinashore, of which the Towzi Nos. are 325 and 326 and proprietor of 1 anna and 12 gundas share of Mouzah Raghunathpur, granted a putni lease of his above shares in the above moahs to Plaintiff's father by a registered putna, dated 6th Bhadra 1284, at an annual rental of Rs. 111-0-3½ gundas; that at the time of the putni settlement there was an oral agreement to the effect that if by testing the jamas of the tenants there be any decrease, then the jama fixed in the lease will also be reduced; that after testing the jamas of the tenants there was found a decrease of Rs. 11-15 annas 6 gundas and accordingly the lessor Krishna Prosanna reduced the jama to Rs. 99-0-13½ gundas; that after the death of Krishna Prosanna, his widow, Annapurna, sold her right to the Defendant, to whom the Plaintiff paid his putni rent at the reduced jama; that subsequently in 1301, 1302, 1303 and 1304, the Defendant filed petitions before the Collector under Regulation VIII of 1819 and compelled the Plaintiff to pay the rent at the rate fixed in the lease, and thereby exacted a certain sum in excess of the rent lawfully payable by him (Plaintiff). The Plaintiff therefore now prays for a declaration that the jama of the putni mahal is Rs. 99-0-13½ gundas per annum and not Rs. 111-0-13½ gundas, and further seeks to recover Rs. 151-15 annas 10 gundas exacted by the Defendant in excess of the rent lawfully payable by him (Plaintiff). The defence is that the claim is barred by limitation; that there was never any oral agreement to reduce the jama fixed in the lease; that he (Defendant) never exacted anything in excess of the amount legally recoverable by him; and that the Plaintiff is not entitled to recover the amount claimed.

The Munsif found for the Plaintiff in all points and gave the relief asked for. On Defendant's appeal to the District Judge it was argued mainly that proviso 2 to sec. 92 of the Evidence Act did not apply, as the elaborate and formal deed expressly mentions that the rent should on no account be altered.

The District Judge relied on the cases of Kashi Nath Chakravarti v. Chandi Charan Banerjee (5 W. R. 66), and Ramjibun Seroney v. Aghore Nath Chatterjee (I. L. R. 25 Cal. 401), and allowed the appeal holding that the contemporaneous oral agreement relied upon could not be proved and dismissed the suit.

The Plaintiff thereupon preferred this appeal, and on his behalf it was argued that the Plaintiff was entitled to give oral evidence of the subsequent acts and conduct of the parties, and reliance was placed on the cases of Satyesh Chander Sarkar v. Dhanput Singh (I. L. R. 24 Cal. 20), Preo Nath Saha v. Madhu Sudan Bhuiya (I. L. R. 25 Cal. 603), and Khandkar Abdur Rahman v. Ali Hafez (I. L. R. 28 Cal. 256).

On behalf of the Respondent reliance was placed on the case of Mayandi Chetti v. Oliver (I. L. R. 22 Mad. 261).

Held—Sec. 92 of the Evidence Act precludes the Plaintiff from proving the contemporaneous oral agreement which he has set up in para. 3 of his plaint.

That the acts and conduct of the parties can only be proof (1) either of a contemporaneous oral agreement varying the terms of the registered contract, or (2) of a subsequent oral agreement having the same effect. In the former case the evidence is excluded by sec. 92, and in the latter case by proviso 4 to sec. 92, and by the fact that the Plaintiff in his plaint set up no subsequent oral agreement but a contemporaneous oral agreement.

Mayandi Chetti v. Oliver (I. L. R. 22 Mad 261) referred to.

Satyesh Chander Sarkar v. Dhanput Singh (I. L. R. 24 Cal. 20) Preo Nath Saha v. Madhu Sudan Bhuiya (I. L. R. 25 Cal. 603) and Khandkar Abdur Rahman v. Ali Hafez (I. L. R. 28 Cal. 256) explained and distinguished.

Babus Nilmadhab Bose and Mohini Mohan Chatterbutty for the Appellant.

Babu Kisori Lal Sarkar for the Respondent.

REPORTS (See Index.)

NOTICE.

The Meeting of the Legislative Council, which was fixed for Friday, the 23rd instant, is postponed, by order of His Excellency the Viceroy. The date fixed for the next meeting will be intimated hereafter.

H. W. C. CARNDUFF,

Secy., Secy. to the Govt. of India, Legislative Department.

WE REGRET TO NOTICE LORD HOBHOUSE'S RETIREMENT, although it be at the age of 81 and after 20 years' unpaid service on the Judicial Committee.

MR. JUSTICE HARRINGTON AND MR. JUSTICE GUPTA will sit as Vacation Judges this year.

WE DRAW ATTENTION TO THE DECISION OF RAMJINI and Gupta, JJ., in Uned v. Anath, noted this issue at p. 304, by which Rule 33, framed by the Board of Revenue under sec. 106 of the Road Cess Act, has been declared ultra vires.

THE FOLLOWING IMPORTANT NOTIFICATION AFFECTING the residence clause in the Regulations of the Government of India, under the Indian Councils Act of 1892, relating to the election of members to local Councils, was published in the Gazette of India of 17th August 1901:—

In exercise of the power conferred by sec. 1, sub-sec. (4), of the Indian Councils Act, 1892 (55 and 56 Vict., c. 14), and with the approval of the Secretary of State for India in Council, the Governor General in Council is pleased to modify, to the extent set forth below, the regulations published with the Notification of the Government of India in the Home Department, No. 359, dated the 17th March 1893, as to the conditions under which nominations of Additional Members of Council are to be made by the Governors of Madras and Bombay, and nominations of Councillors by the Lieutenant-Governors of the Bengal Division of the Presidency of Fort William and of the North-Western Provinces and Oudh, respectively, for their assistance in making Laws and Regulations:

In Regulation VI, the word "ordinarily" shall be omitted, and the following explanation shall be added, namely:

'Explanation. - A person is "not "resident" within the meaning of this Rule unless he has a place of residence in the locality concerned and such practical connection with that locality as qualifies him to represent the inhabitants thereof.'

'If at any time the question is raised whether a person proposed for election is "resident" within the meaning of this Rule, the question shall be referred to and decided by the Local Government, whose decision shall be final.'

The residence clause in Reg. VI came up for construction in Bengal on several occasions. Latterly it was settled that if a person had a place of residence within his electoral division and had local connections and interest, he might be regarded as a resident of that division. The word "ordinarily" made the rule more stringent and now that it has been removed we expect that there will be less scope for a disappointed candidate to fight over the residence clause. The cleverest men do not always stay at home. To make the residence clause compulsory or stringent is to unduly fetter the choice of the most capable candidates and it is because of this that since the days of Elizabethan elections the residence clause has been removed from the English Statute books.

THE JUDGMENT ON APPEAL FROM AN ORDER OF Stanley, J., in the Goods of Luchminarain Bogla, reported in this issue at p. 781, holding that the order of a single judge refusing to stay the issue of probate is a "judgment" within the meaning of sec. 15 of the Letters Patent and is therefore appealable and that a stay of execution against a decree directing the issue of a probate may be ordered by the Appellate Court, is deserving of special attention, especially, as it differs from the view recently taken by the Madras High Court in Durga Prasada v. Mallikarjuna and reported at p. 358 of the current Madras Series of the Indian Law Reports.

THE EDITOR OF THE Globe WAS LATELY SUMMONED before the Bar of the House of Commons, for having libelled the Irish members, and was let off after an expression of regret. We are not admirers of up-to-date journalism but neither are we any the more partial to such out-of-date privileges as entitle either the House of Commons or a High Court of Justice to commit people summarily for contempt. There was a time when fishing in the tank of a member of Parliament was considered a breach of Parliamentary privilege, or the holding of a judge by his dangling leg when in the act of getting into his carriage by a distressed suitor was construed into contempt. We have seen, however, in recent years how the superior Courts have been loath to avail themselves of such powers and the forbearance recently shown in Parliament to the Editors of the Globe and the Daily Mail surely indicate that even the all-powerful House of Commons is none the more zealous of its arbitrary privileges. The law of libel and regular judicial proceeding in a Court of law seem in public opinion to be more satisfactory to both the maligner and the maligned.

MASTER MACDONELL'S LAST SUMMARY OF CRIMINAL Judicial Statistics of England and Wales has its bright as well as its dark side. It is indeed gratifying to observe that in 1857, with a population of twenty-two millions, crimes amounted to 101,000 while in 1899 with a population of thirty-two millions crimes went down to 76,000. This marked improvement is, no doubt, attributable to enlightened legislative measures and progressive social schemes that have in a manner revolutionized the status, the environment, the habits and conditions of life of the lower classes during the last half century. This downward criminal tendency having been steadily maintained in spite of the growth of a more humane view of criminal law and its administration, it may be taken as conclusive that the better method of meeting crime is to endeavour always to elevate the people socially, mentally, morally and materially rather than to misdirect all our energy and ingenuity in combating human depravity by the degrading influence of prison-life and punishment.

NOTWITHSTANDING THE DECREASE IN CRIMES GENERALLY and as against property in particular, it is very deplorable indeed that crimes against morals instead of being on the decrease since 1857 seems to be on the increase. As is to be expected, Master Macdonell finds that crimes of this variety are closely connected with the growth of material and physical comforts of the community. For instance offences of this character reached the maximum in 1893 and 1894, which were also periods of great commercial prosperity. Of other vices of civilization, such as gambling and drunkenness, it is but natural that they would be more pronounced in years of prosperity. But prosecutions under these heads seem to vary according to the temper of the police and the public and it will be interesting to know if Master Macdonell, C. B., will have anything to say as to the license of the Mafeking-day or of the war fever in his summary of Criminal Statistics of 1900.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—CARR v. FRANCIS TIMES AND CO. Before THE LORD CHANCELLOR, LORD MACNAGHTEN, LORD SHAND, LORD BRAMPTON and LORD LINDLEY. 8th July 1901.

International law—Action in tort for acts committed within the dominion of an Independent Sovereign.

The Respondents are merchants carrying on business in London, Beshire and Muscat. The Appellant is an officer in the British Navy and was, at the time the act complained of was committed, in command of H. M. S. "Lapwing" stationed in the Persian Gulf. The action was brought against him in that capacity to recover damages for wrongfully depriving the Plaintiffs, the Respondents Francis Times and Co., of 25 cases of cartridges which were on board the "Baluchistan" on its way to Bahrein via Beshire, in the ordinary course of their trade. Those goods were seized on 24th January 1898 by the Appellant as such officer while the vessel was making for Muscat and was within the territorial waters of His Highness the Sultan of Muscat. The Appellant acting in consonance with a previous proclamation of the Sultan, dated the 13th January 1898 boarded the "Baluchistan," took possession of those cases of ammunition, informing the master thereof that the cargo was under arrest, and subsequently landed same at Muscat.

The matter came before the Court constituted by the Sultan which, by its order, dated the 15th April 1898, inter alia, found that the seizure was in all respects legal and in accordance with the permission given by His Highness the Sultan to British Men-of-War in pursuance of the request of the British and Persian Governments.

To that judgment approval was signified by the Sultan under his own handwriting. Mr. Justice Guthrie at the trial with a jury gave judgment for the Defendant the present Appellant Captain Carr. The Court of Appeal reversed that decision; hence the present appeal to the House of Lords by Captain Carr.

Their Lordships allowed the appeal. The judgments state, inter alia, that the Sultan had declared what was his own law. His authority was supreme within the territorial waters of Muscat, which were for this purpose, as much a part of the Sultan's dominions as the land over which he exercises absolute and unquestioned sway. His declaration was an act of State which could not be impugned in this country. See Dobree v. Napier (5 L. J. C. P. N. S., 273). That was an a fortiori case because the act instead of being done against the law of this country as in Dobree v. Napier, the act in the present case was done by order of the British Crown. The law of the Sultan of Muscat was his will and pleasure and no British tribunal was competent to go beyond the Sultan's declaration. It was well settled law (Phillips v. Eyre, 1870, L. R. 6 Q. B. 1) that in order to found an action in this country for a wrong committed abroad two conditions must be fulfilled, first, the wrong must be of such a character that it would have been actionable if committed in England, and, secondly, the act must have been justifiable by the law of the place where it was committed. The present case turns on the 2nd proposition. The true meaning of the said proclamation under which the Appellant had acted, and of the said report of the Sultan's High Court confirmed by His Highness, was that the act, if done was to be done under his authority as his act. The seizure complained of by the Plaintiffs the Respondents being lawful by the law of the State in which it was effected, was a sufficient answer in refutation of the claim made by Francis Times & Co.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—EARL COWLEY v. VIOLET COUNTESS COWLEY. Before the LORD CHANCELLOR, LORDS MACNAGHTEN, JAMES OF HEREFORD, BRADTON, and LINDLEY. 30th July 1901.

Property in title.

The facts of this case which was commenced by Lord Cowley are given in 4 C. W. N. clxiv, cclx.

This was Lord Cowley's appeal from the decision of the Court of Appeal. Their Lordships delivered their judgment, which had been reserved, today and were unanimous in dismissing the appeal with costs.

It has been held that the present was a controversy in which no Court of law has any concern. What jurisdiction had any Court of law to determine a question of dignity. If there was a claim for such a right that jurisdiction would be vested in that House as a Committee of Privileges not as a Court of law. No jurisdiction arose in the Divorce Court simply on the ground that there had been a divorce suit between the parties. There was no precedent for such a claim. Although by her second marriage the Countess Cowley ceased to be a peeress, the usages of society were such as to entitle her by courtesy to her old name. The case of Lady Dacre (Journals of the House of Lords, 1661, p. 298) showed the recognition of such usage by the Committee of Privileges. For these reasons besides those given by the Court of Appeal, Earl Cowley's claim for an injunction was rightly dismissed.

Mr. Haldane, K. C., Mr. B. Deane, K. C., and Mr. Willock in support of Earl Cowley's contention.

Mr. Lawson Walton, K. C., and Mr. Mark Romer for the Countess.

Appeal dismissed with costs.

COURT OF APPEAL.—FARQUHARSON BROTHERS & Co. v. KING & Co. Before the MASTER OF THE ROLLS, LORDS JUSTICES VAUGHAN WILLIAMS and STERLING. 20th July 1901.

Law regarding innocent persons suffering by the acts of a third party—Equity.

The Appellants were Defendants in the litigation; they are packing-case manufacturers; they sought in this appeal an order for judgment in their favour or a new trial of this litigation which had ended before Mr. Justice Mithew and a special jury in a verdict being entered in favour of the Respondents who are timber-merchants carrying on a timber importing business. The prayer in their statement of claim was that the Defendants had for some four years detained from them several lots of timber.

The Plaintiffs imported timber used to be stocked at the Surrey Commercial Docks, and on delivery-orders signed by themselves the timbers they required were made over to them.

The question for determination in this litigation arose owing to Plaintiffs having altered the method of delivery. In January 1895, Plaintiffs wrote to that Dock Company advising them to accept all transfers or delivery orders signed on their behalf by one Capon, who was their confidential clerk. A similar communication was sent to the Directors of that Dock Company. Full powers were thus conceded to Capon for getting the timber stored out of the Docks. Capon acted dishonestly. He signed delivery orders for a certain quantity of timber and then sold them to the Defendants. From 1896 to 1900 Capon perpetrated a series of frauds. Acting in the name of Brown he sold, writing from a false address, to the Defendants several lots of timber from time to time. It was admitted throughout the litigation that the Defendants had acted bona fide in the belief that Capon, who was acting in the name of Brown, had authority to sell, and Defendants had paid invariably a fair price to Capon.

The MASTER OF THE ROLLS and LORD JUSTICE VAUGHAN WILLIAMS thought that the learned Judges ought to have asked the jury, whether the Plaintiffs by their conduct enabled Capon to hold himself out as the owner of the goods so as to enable him to dispose of them. The answer to that question should have been given in the affirmative and on such answer judgment should have been entered for the Defendants.

It had been decided that, whenever one of two innocent persons must suffer from the acts of a third party, the person who has enabled such third person to occasion the loss must be responsible for it. The act which enabled the third person to occasion the loss must be one connected with the fraud, the cause of the loss. Here the authority given to Capon was very large; armed with such authority Capon obtained delivery, by signing delivery orders to the Dock Company to transfer parcels of timber to the order of Brown, next in the name of Brown directed the Company to transfer the timber to Defendants' order, who thereupon took delivery, and paid Capon for same. The Plaintiffs had consequently by their conduct enabled Capon to hold himself out as the owner of the goods able to dispose of them.

LORD JUSTICE STERLING per contra thought that Plaintiffs knew nothing of the transfer of the goods into the name of Brown, nor of the sale of the goods. They gave the Dock Company notice to accept Capon's delivery orders, but they did not authorize the Dock Company to communicate that to anyone. They did not authorize Capon to hold himself out as having authority to deal with the goods at all. The case was the same as if Capon had transferred the goods into his own name, got delivery and sold them. As regards negligence it had been decided that even if Plaintiffs' negligence had brought on the loss to Defendants, Plaintiffs owed no duty to Defendants which the law recognized, either as individuals or as members of the general public, and in his Lordship's opinion the application should be dismissed.

JUDGMENT OF MAJORITY of Court was that judgment should be entered for Defendants.

Mr. Lawson Walton, K. C., and Mr. Cababe for the Defendants.

Mr. Joseph Walton, K. C., and Mr. Whately for the Plaintiffs.

• Appeal allowed.

CHANCERY DIVISION.—JEFFREYS v. JEFFREYS.
Before MR. JUSTICE FARWELL. 15th March 1901.

Will—Codicil—Forfeiture clause—Conditions void for uncertainty.

A life estate in a trust estate was left to his daughter by the testator. There was a condition attached to the bequest on the happening of which the life estate was to be forfeited. It was as follows:—"I expressly direct my trustees and declare that if my daughter shall in any way associate, correspond or visit with any of my present wife's nephews or nieces, or if she shall to the knowledge of my trustees entertain or exercise hospitality to any of them, or contribute to their support, then all the estate and interest of my daughter shall be forfeited, cease and determine."

No breach of condition was alleged but the Plaintiff asked by this summons for adjudication whether the codicil was not void for uncertainty.

After overruling the preliminary objection that the matter cannot be decided now, because there had been no breach of condition, the learned Judge held that the conditions were so vague that the daughter could not predicate with any certainty what was that she was forbidden to do. The general principle applicable to such cases was definitely laid down in Clavering v. Ellison (7 H. L. C. 707) and Pillingham v. Bromby (1 Turner & Russel, 530); to suffer forfeiture one must be able to predicate with certainty. The condition was therefore declared void.

Mr. Upjohn, K. C., and Mr. Clare for the Plaintiff.
Mr. Balcher, K. C., and Mr. Yelverton for the Defendants, the testator's other children.

Notes of Cases.

(The important ones to be fully reported hereafter.)

PRIVY COUNCIL. Re HENDERSON'S PATENT.
13th July 1901.

Prolongation of patent—Account of remuneration already gained by inventor.

LORD DAWEY to-day delivered their Lordships' judgment in the petition of the British Aluminium Company, giving the reasons for refusing to prolong Mr. A. C. Henderson's patent for manufacturing Aluminium by electrolysis. The judgment concludes as follows:—

"Persons who applied to the Board for the prolongation of Letters Patent could not be too frequently reminded of the law as laid down by Lord Cairns in 'Laxby's patent' (L. R. 3 P. C. 292):— 'It is the duty of every patentee who comes for the prolongation of his patent to take upon himself the onus of satisfying this committee, in a manner which admits of no controversy, what has been the amount of remuneration which in every point of view the invention has brought to him, in order that their Lordships may be able to come to a conclusion whether that remuneration may fairly be considered as a sufficient reward for his invention, or not. It is not for this committee to send back the accounts for further particulars, nor to dissect the accounts for the purpose of surmising what might be their real outcome if they were differently cast; it is for the applicant to bring his accounts before the committee in a shape which will leave no doubt as to what the remuneration has been which he has received.' The words of Lord Cairns were equally applicable where, as in the present case, the Petitioners were bound to prove that the inventor had not been adequately remunerated. It might be surmised, from the materials before their Lordships, that the inventor had received or became entitled to receive something like 600,000*l.*, or say, £24,000 for his patent rights, besides other advantages in the form of shares which might or might not be of value. But whether that be so or not, it was sufficient for the present purpose to say that the accounts were not before their Lordships in a shape which enabled them to form any clear opinion on the subject. What had been said rendered it unnecessary to consider the other points mentioned by the Attorney-General. Their Lordships would only say that the failure of the patentee to push the patented invention in this country for seven years and the circumstance of the expiration of the foreign patents were also serious obstacles to the success of the present application. Neither of those circumstances would be in itself conclusive against the Petitioners. But it would require a very strong case to induce their Lordships to recommend a prolongation of the patent where those circumstances occurred. The principle upon which objections of that class should be dealt with were explained in the judgments of the Board in 'Semet and Solway's Patent' (1895, A. C. 78) where the extension was granted and 'Peepers Patent' (12 Pat. Ca., 292) where it was refused. For those reasons their Lordships had humbly advised His Majesty that the petition should be dismissed. The Petitioners would pay one set of costs to the two objectors.

Mr. Fletcher Moulton, K. C., Mr. R. Wallace and Mr. J. C. Graham for the Petitioners.

Mr. Cripps, K. C., Mr. Waggott and Mr. A. J. Walter for the Opposition.

The Attorney-General and Mr. Sutton for the Crown.

C. W. A. Petition dismissed.

PRIVY COUNCIL.—Appeal from the Royal Court of St. Lucia. QUINLAN v. QUINLAN. 13th July 1901.

Leave to appeal in forma pauperis, discharge of.

In this matter the judgment of their Lordships, discharging an order in Council of 29th June 1900 whereby leave to appeal was given to the Respondent Mr. Quinlan (see 5 C. W. N. cclxxvii), which was delivered by Lord Davey, inter alia, states:—

"The present application was based on grounds that the former petition contained misleading statements and that material facts were withheld. It was fair to the Respondent to say that his petition did not appear to have contained any actual misrepresentation of any material facts, though many of the allegations in it were irrelevant, but it was said that it did not fairly state the effect of the evidence in the two suits, and, that if their Lordships' attention had been called to the proceedings at the trial, it would have at once appeared that there was no foundation for the proposed appeals and that in fact the appeals in both suits were frivolous."

Then after commenting on the character of the suits and the pleadings, evidence and decisions thereon, the judgment concludes as follows:—

"Their Lordships had come to the conclusion that no substantial point was raised in the appeal either in the separation suit or in the mortgage suit. Leave to appeal to the King in Council in forma pauperis was not, of course; and in the opinion of their Lordships it ought not to be granted where it was made apparent that the proposed appeal was idle and frivolous. It would be wrong to put parties to the expense of opposing such an appeal in a case where they could not recover any costs if successful. But in saying that, their Lordships did not intend to invite a premature discussion of the merits of the case on a petition to discharge an order to appeal in forma pauperis, nor would they entertain an application of that character. Usually the statement of counsel showing that there was a real question to be argued should be received, and it was enough if there be such a question, although the success of the proposed Appellant might be doubtful. In the present case their Lordships were satisfied on the materials before them that there was no question to be tried in either suit, and if the facts had been as fully before them when they advised the Crown to make the order as they were now the order would not have been made. They had, therefore, humbly advised His Majesty that the order in Council of 29th June 1900 should be discharged. The Petitioner did not ask for costs. The Respondent suggested that their Lordships might grant a new trial on the ground of the bias said to have been exhibited against him by the Chief Justice. They could, of course, after hearing the appeals, direct a remand if they considered that justice required that course. But it would have to be shown that there had been a serious miscarriage of justice. In the present case nothing of the kind appeared. The question in each suit was purely one of fact, and there were no grounds for saying that the judgments were wrong on the materials before the Court, or that the Respondent was prevented from adducing further evidence if he had been so minded."

PRIVY COUNCIL.—Appeal from Oudh. MURLI DHUR v. BACHURAJ SINGH. 19th July 1901. (See 4 C. W. N. cclxxviii).

PRIVY COUNCIL.—On appeal from Allahabad. ASGHAR ALI KHAN v. KURSHED ALI KHAN. 27th July 1901.

Agency Limitation.

LORD ROBERTSON delivered their Lordships' considered judgment in this litigation between two brothers in which it became necessary to ascertain the relations of one to the other out of which the disputes had arisen. Their Lordships advised His Majesty to dismiss these consolidated appeals with costs, being of opinion that the several actions had been disposed of by the High Court in an appropriate manner. In the course of their judgment their Lordships say:—"Their Lordships are of opinion that the 89th article of the 2nd schedule of the Limitation Act, 1877, applied, for they hold that the words "moveable property" include money. The evidence of Asghar Ali showed that the relation of agency continued down to the institution of the suit and accordingly the plea of limitation failed."

Mr. Mayne for the Appellant.

Mr. Cowell and Mr. Colvin for the Respondent.

LORD MACNAGHTEN.

LORD ROBERTSON. THE BAKU STANDARD STEAMSHIP

LORD LINDLEY.

SIR FORD NORTH. THE AUGILE STEAMSHIP.

Salvage services and damages—Calculation—Practice of Privy Council—Dispute only as to amount.

In concluding their Lordships' judgment SIR FORD NORTH as regards above considerations said:—

"It was clearly settled that when the vessel of a salvor had, without default on his part, been injured in the performance of salvage services, compensation might be awarded to him in respect of the injury so sustained, and damages consequent thereon. It was laid down in the De Bay case, Ried v. Gibb (L. R. 8 App. Cas. 559) that it was always justifiable and sometimes important—if it could be done—to ascertain what damages and losses the salvor vessel had sustained in rendering salvage services. It was often difficult and expensive, and sometimes impossible to ascertain exactly the amount of such loss, and in such cases the amount of salvage must be assessed in a general manner, upon so liberal a scale as to cover the loss and to afford also an adequate reward for the services rendered. It was also laid down in the case of Blyth (Lushington's Reports, p. 16) that when the vessel of a salvor was injured or lost while engaged in a salvage service, the presumption was that the injury or loss was caused by the necessities of the service, and not by the default of the salvors; and that the burden of proof lay upon the parties who alleged that the loss was caused by the salvors' own acts. Adopting the principles thus laid down and in the absence of any evidence that the damage to the Augile was caused by negligence or default on the part of the master or crew of the vessel, their Lordships were of opinion that the damage assessed by the Registrar was rightly awarded against the Appellants. That being so, the compensation to be given for salvage services, as distinguished from compensation for damage ought, to be calculated on a less liberal scale than if the sum given for salvage was intended to cover compensation for damage also. Their Lordships considering the evidence and that the compensation for damage was dealt with separately, are of opinion that full justice would have been done by an award of less than £1,000 for salvage. But that was a question of amount only and it was not the custom of the Committee to vary the decision of a Court below on a question of amount merely because they were of opinion, that if the case had come before them in the first instance, they might have awarded a smaller sum. It had been laid down in the said case of Bird v. Gibb and other cases that they would only do so if the amount awarded appeared to them to be grossly in excess of what was right, which was not the case here."

[ON APPEAL FROM THE SUPREME COURT OF BRITISH COLUMBIA.]

LORD DAVEY.

LORD JAMES OF HEREFORD.

LORD ROBERTSON.

SIR R. COUCE.

1901.

27, July.

THE COLLECTOR OF VOTERS OF BRITISH COLUMBIA

TOMAI HOMMA.

British Columbia—Local legislature, power of to deny full citizenship to naturalised British subjects—Local franchise—Register of voters—Special leave to appeal—Costs.

This was an application by the Collector of Voters, who is a Government official, to be allowed to appeal from a decision of the Supreme Court of British Columbia, which had supported the decision of the County Court Judge of the electoral district of Vancouver. These decisions were passed in favour of the abovenamed Tomai Homma, a Japanese by birth and nationality, but a naturalized British subject. They were opposed to the decision of the Petitioner, the Collector of Voters, who had refused to register the name of Tomai Homma under the authority of a local statute. That statute prohibited the registration of the name of any Kinkamen, Japanese or Indians on the register of voters. The question was whether his decision was correct or that of the two Courts who decided the matter on appeal, whether it was within the powers of a provincial legislature, to refuse to admit to full citizenship natives of India, China or Japan.

Mr. C. A. Russell, K. C., appeared in support of the application.

The Hon'ble Edward Blake, K. C., for the Respondent, Tomai Homma, did not oppose the application but asked for terms as to costs as directed by their Lordships in the Queen v. Stewart in 1890 in a British Columbian appeal. He asked in accordance therewith that the Appellant should pay the costs in any event.

THEIR LORDSHIPS gave leave to appeal on the understanding that the Petitioner would pay the costs whether he succeeded or failed in the appeal for which leave to appeal was granted.

It was conceded that it was a burning question in British Columbia.

LORD DAVEY said the question was one of importance, and their Lordships would advise His Majesty to grant leave to appeal, on the understanding that the Attorney-General for British Columbia and also for the Dominion of Canada should be at liberty to intervene.

Special leave to appeal from the determination of a Judge and jury.

The Petitioner, a member of a Manchester firm of accountants, petitioned for special leave to appeal against the finding of the acting Deemster of the Isle of Man and a jury. He was prosecuted with others last year for being a party to the issue of false balance-sheets in connection with the failure of the Dumbell Banking Company of the Isle of Man. Convicted with a recommendation to mercy he was sentenced to 6 months' imprisonment with hard labour which he has undergone. He complained that most violent language was expressed in the press against him during the trial. That no fraudulent intention was proved at the trial, and there was no evidence to support the charge against him and there had been misdirection by the Judge.

His object in seeking special leave in order that his conviction might be set aside was to protect his being expelled by the Institute of Chartered Accountants of which he was a member.

The LORD CHANCELLOR said their Lordships had come to the conclusion that there was nothing shown which would justify their setting aside the conviction. The conduct of the press was very reprehensible, but there was nothing to point to the jury having been influenced by the statements complained of. There was no fact established sufficient to counter-veil the solemn determination of Judge and jury, which was based on evidence. Whether their Lordships would have formed the same opinion on the evidence as the jury had done was outside the question, that was not enough to justify their setting aside the verdict of the jury.

Mr. Muir Mackenzie argued in support of the petition.

Mr. Charles Mathews and Mr. Carrington for the Government of the Isle of Man were not called on.

THEIR LORDSHIPS declined to advise His Majesty to grant leave to appeal.

APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE

No. 2044 of 1899.

NANDA LAL GOSWAMI and ors.,

Defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 5,

Appellants,

AMEER ALI, J.

PRATT, J.

JAJENSWAR HALDAR and ors.,

Plaintiffs, Respondents.

Suit for possession of land and tree and for damages—Possession, absence of evidence of—Opus—Claim to property by Plaintiff as being within his putni—Allegation by Defendant that property is within his mokurari mautasi-tenure—Admissum of title of Defendant, absence of—Trespasser—Long possession—Presumption.

This was an appeal preferred on the 6th of November 1899, against the decree of Babu Karunamoy Banerjee, Subordinate Judge of Zillah Burdwan, dated the 21st August 1899, reversing the decree of Babu Basanta Kumar Bose, Munsif of Kulna, dated the 13th July 1898.

This appeal arose out of a suit for possession of an aswatha (Banian) tree and its site, the Plaintiffs claiming them as their khas properties included in their putni melhal Jaluidanga to which the road on the side of which the tree stood appertained. The Plaintiffs also claimed the value of the tree said to have been cut by the Defendants.

The Defendant No. 2 claimed the road and the tree as included in his mokurari mautasi tenure under the Plaintiffs, while the Defendants Nos. 1, 3 and 4 disclaimed all concern with them. The contesting Defendant also pleaded limitation and objected to the damages claimed.

The first Court found the evidence of possession on both sides to be untrustworthy and being of opinion that possession must therefore follow title to the land and that in this case the onus lay on the Plaintiffs to prove that the disputed tree and land were not included in the Defendants' tenure, which the Plaintiffs could not discharge, dismissed the Plaintiffs' claim. The Munsif relied on the case of Rhedoy Kristo Mistry v. Nobin Chandra Sen (12 C. L. R. 457).

Against that decree the Plaintiffs appealed, and it was argued on their behalf that the first Court had wrongly thrown the onus on the Plaintiffs in this case and that their possession had been satisfactorily proved. The Subordinate Judge agreed with the first Court that there was no satisfactory evidence as to the possession of the tree and its site; but he held that in the facts and circumstances of the case, there being no admission in the plaint of the Defendants' tenure, and the Plaintiffs having described and treated the Defendants as trespassers, the case of Rhedoy Kristo Mistry v. Nobin Chandra Sen (12 C. L. R. 457) relied upon by the first Court did not apply to the facts of the present case. On the contrary the Subordinate Judge held that the cases of Balai Ahir v. Bhuggobutty Kber (11 C. L. R. 476), Ram Moni v. Alimuddin and Rajkrishna Mukherjee v. Peari Mohan Mukherjee (20 W. R. pp. 374 and 421) governed the present case and that the Plaintiffs were entitled to a decree.

Against that decree the Defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 5 preferred this appeal, and it was argued that the case of Rhedoy Kristo Mistry v. Nobin Chandra Sen (12 C. L. R. 457) which was followed in Rajendra Kumar Bose v. Mohim Chandra Ghose (3 C. W. N. 763) applied to the present case and that the onus lay upon the landlord to prove his own title in order to disturb a possession of very long duration.

Held—That the possession by the Defendant of a tenure of limited extent within the Plaintiffs' putni raises no presumption of title upon his seizure of a piece of land and claiming it as part of his tenure.

That the onus lay upon the Defendants to prove that the land was included in their mokurani holding and not upon the Plaintiffs to shew that it was not.

Rajendra Kumar Bose v. Mohim Chandra Ghose (3 C. W. N. 763) and Rhedoy Kristo Mistry v. Nobin Chandra Sen (12 C. L. R. 457) explained and distinguished.

That when a tenant has been in long and peaceable occupation of land as part of an admitted tenure, it lies upon the landlord in a suit for ejectment to prove in the first instance that the land is his khas property and not the tenants'.

Babu Shib Chandra Palit for the Appellants.

Dr. Ashutosh Mukherjee and Babus Nalini Nath Sen and Bisra Nath Bose for the Respondents.

Appeal dismissed.

APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE

No. 721 OF 1899.

UMED RASUL SAHA and others,
Principal Defendants, Appellants, 1901.

7, August. } ANATH BANDHU CHOWDHURY and anr.,
Plaintiffs, Respondents.

Income Tax Act (II of 1884, B. C.), sec. 5—Profits of a mela held on land let for agricultural purposes—Mela held when there would be no crops on such land—Liability to pay road-cess—Tenure-holder—Board's manual—Rule 33, framed by the Board—Road-cess Act (IX of 1880, B. C.), Ch. II, Ch. I, secs. 79, 106—Board's cess proceedings (of 12th November 1898, No. 2, Collection 10, File 96, of 1897)—Income-tax and road-cess, liability to pay—Jurisdiction of Collector to assess road-cess—Ultra vires.

This was an appeal preferred on the 18th of April 1899, against the decree of Babu Gopal Chandra Banerjee, Subordinate Judge of Rungpur, dated the 23rd of January 1899, modifying the decree of Babu Rajendra Lal Ghose, Munsif of Nelphamari, dated the 30th June 1898.

The facts of the case are shortly these:—The Appellants-Defendants held a mokurari jama under the Plaintiffs and the pro forma Defendant of Rs. 12-8 per annum which they had agreed to pay for the right to hold a mela on a certain land, in the month of Falgun every year, when there would be no crops on the land. According to their pattah, dated the 12th Magh 1267, they were to pay this sum to their landlords from the profits of the mela. They were called upon by the Collector to submit a valuation roll under the Road-cess Act (IX of 1889, B. C.), with regard to the profits of this mela and submitted it. The Collector then fixed a certain amount of road-cess on the profits of the mela which he realized from the Plaintiffs. The Plaintiffs now sued to recover this road-cess from the Defendants as well as the rent due under the lease.

The first Court disallowed the Plaintiffs' claim for road-cess. The Subordinate Judge, on appeal, allowed it holding that the Defendants were tenure-holders within the definition of tenure-holder contained in the Road-cess Act.

The Defendants preferred this appeal, and on their behalf it was argued that inasmuch as they had to pay income-tax on the profits of the mela they ought not to be held liable for both income-tax and road-cess, that no road-cess was payable on account of the profits of the mela held on the land when it is not held for purposes of agriculture, and that the mere fact that the Collector assessed cesses under the Road-cess Act was not sufficient to make them liable to the Plaintiffs for the road-cess, as the Collector had acted without jurisdiction.

Held—That the land on which the mela is held is no doubt land used for purposes of agriculture when it is not being used for the purposes of the melq, but when it is being used for the purposes of the mela it is not being used for purposes of agriculture and the profits of the mela are not incomes which would be exempted from income-tax under sec. 5 of Act II of 1886.

That the Defendants would be liable to pay income-tax and consequently not road-cess.

That it was not intended by the legislature to assess with road-cess tax land from which profits subject to income-tax are derived, except when such land is used for agricultural purposes.

That the rule (Rule 33 at pp. 74 and 75 of the Road-cess Manual) framed by the Board of Revenue under sec. 106 of the Road-cess Act to the effect that the profits derived from land used for the purposes of a mela are assessable with road-cess is ultra vires and the Board is not authorized to make such a rule under the provisions of sec. 106 of Act IX of 1880, B. C.

Babus Saroda Charan Mittra and Soroshi Charan Mittra for the Appellants.

Babu Mohini Mohan Chakravarty for the Respondent.

ALTHOUGH WE CANNOT GRUDGE LORD HOBHOUSE his well-merited retirement yet we cannot help feeling a deep sense of loss on our being so suddenly deprived of the benefit of his mature experience, deep insight, profound learning and sober judgment in matters of vital importance to many in this country. It was exceedingly self-denying on his part to have served on the Judicial Committee for twenty years without any pay. He was our Law Member in the Supreme Council from 1872 to 1877. He had before that been a Queen's Council having taken silk in 1862 and as a leader, he was in great requisition before the Privy Council Bar. Not very long after his retirement from India he was sworn in as a Privy Councillor and was appointed one of the two members who, may, under the Statute 3 and 4, William IV, c. 41, sec. 1, be empowered to sit on the Judicial Committee; the other member at the time was Sir Richard Couch and is at present, Lord James of Hereford. Since Lord Hobhouse took his seat in the Judicial Committee in 1881, we have owed to him many valuable interpretations in the region of Hindu, Mahomedan, customary and the codified laws of India. Gifted with a rare judicial mind he succeeded in solving the most complicated questions of fact and law in a manner which carried immediate conviction and commanded universal confidence. The width of his views and the depth of his sympathy was not confined to the regions of law but travelled outside the scope of his self-imposed judicial duties and made him take interest in all questions affecting the welfare of India. We shall be wanting in our duty if we did not give expression to the deep sense of obligation in which he has placed the people of this country by his self-depriving services on their behalf even after the mature age of sixty and for a continuous period of twenty years when an ordinary man would be longing for rest in the seclusion of a retired life. We think that some steps should be taken by the public and the profession to make known our appreciation of his singular services on behalf of this country and the great esteem in which he is held by all in consequence. It is a pity that the Courts are closing now but we hope this call to duty will be remembered when we meet after the long vacation. It will not be too late then, for it is never too late to honour a good and a great man.

IN ANSWER TO MR. BRYCE'S QUESTIONS Mr. Chamberlain made the following announcement in the House of Commons regarding the result of the recent conference on the subject of a final Court of Appeal for the Empire.

The majority of the delegates, after several private meetings, submitted resolutions to the effect that appeals should continue to lie from the colonies and from India to his Majesty in Council, and that appointments to the Judicial Committee should from time to time be made from the Dominion of Canada and Newfoundland, the Commonwealth of Australia, New Zealand, South Africa, the Crown colonies, and India, that the persons so appointed should, if judges, vacate any judicial office held at the time of such appointment, should hold office for life or a term of years, and should be paid an adequate salary. It was further suggested that arrangements should be made for securing a larger attendance of Lords of Appeal at sittings of the Judicial Committee, and that the colonies should suggest such alterations of procedure as might tend to the avoidance of delay, the simplification of procedure, and the lessening of costs.

The great majority of the delegates were opposed to any drastic changes in the present Court of Appeal; and, accordingly, his Majesty's Government do not propose to suggest such changes, although they will, in accordance with the resolutions of the conference, ask the various Governments concerned to suggest such alterations of procedure as may seem to them desirable.

We consider it time that the Home and the Indian Government should take steps to give effect to the recommendations made by the majority of delegates. We offer some suggestions below.

THE LAW INTERPRETATION THAT WAS BEING PUT ON sec. 537 of the Code of Criminal Procedure by the High Courts in India did not, as we had anticipated, find favour with their Lordships of the Privy Council. In the recent criminal appeal by special leave from Madras, namely, that of N. A. Subramanya Iyer, (see Notes ante, p. 269 and post, p. 309) their Lordships observed:—

"The remedying of mere irregularities is familiar in most systems of jurisprudence, but it would be an extraordinary extension of such a branch of administering the criminal law to say that when the code positively enacts that such a trial as that which has taken place here shall not be permitted, that this contravention of the code comes within the description of error, omission, or irregularity."

Further:

"Their Lordships are unable to regard the disobedience to an express provision as to a mode of trial as a mere irregularity."

THE SO-CALLED IRREGULARITY SOUGHT TO BE CURED under sec. 537 by a Full Bench of the Madras High Court consisted in the trial of the Appellant by the Court of Sessions on an indictment in which he was charged with no less than 41 acts, these acts extending over a period of two years. As to the propriety of such a course their Lordships observe:—

"This was plainly in contravention of the Code of Criminal Procedure, sec. 234, which provided that a person may only be tried for three offences of the same kind if committed within a period of 12 months."

As to the policy and purpose of sec. 331 their Lordships say:—

"The reason of such a provision, which is analogous to our own provisions in respect of embezzlement, is obviously in order that the jury may not be prejudiced by the multitude of charges and the inconvenience of hearing together of such a number of instances of culpability, and the consequent embarrassment both to judges and accused. It is likely to cause confusion and to interfere with the definite proof of a distinct offence which it is the object of all criminal procedure to obtain. The policy of such a provision is manifest, and the necessity of a system of written accusation specifying a definite criminal offence is of the essence of criminal procedure."

WHAT FOLLOWS IS NOT MERELY APPLICABLE TO THE facts of this particular case but has a bearing on the practice, sometimes resorted to in our Superior Courts, of disregarding even serious irregularities in the mode of conducting trials in the Courts below and of proceeding to dispose of the case on the facts in the record and thus in a manner usurping the functions of the jury.

"Their Lordships think that the course pursued, and which was plainly illegal, cannot be amended by arranging afterwards what might or might not have been properly submitted to the jury. Upon the assumption that the trial was illegally conducted it is idle to suggest that there is enough left upon the indictment upon which a conviction might have been supported if the accused had been properly tried. The mischief sought to be avoided by the statute has been done. The effect of the multitude of charges before the jury has not been averted by dissecting the verdict afterwards and appropriating the finding of guilty only to such parts of the written accusation as ought to have been submitted to the jury. It would in the first place leave to the Court the functions of the jury, and the accused would never have really been tried at all upon the charge arranged afterwards by the Court. Their Lordships cannot regard this as cured by sec. 537."

This gives the death blow to the plea on which convictions are often upheld by our Courts of Revision even when an accused has not had a fair trial. Another very significant fact in this case is the quashing of the conviction instead of sending it on remand or for retrial. The principles of English criminal law, which surely governs our codes, do not permit an accused to be tried more than once on the same charges and their Lordships, no doubt, set aside the conviction on that account. There is much to be said in favour of this practice and not the least is that, if it is followed, as it is bound to be, the lower Courts will be less lax in the holding of criminal trials and the Police or the prosecution will have no more opportunities of supplying just what was lacking to secure a valid conviction at a subsequent trial.

REPRESENTATION OF INDIA IN THE JUDICIAL COMMITTEE.

The decision of the conference on the subject of an Imperial Court of Appeal and the retirement of Lord Hobhouse call for an adequate representation of India in the Judicial Committee. The only Indian expert that there is now in the Committee is Sir Richard Couch. But Sir Richard is now in his eighty-fifth year and has not of late been in good health. Fortunately, neither of these has stood in his way of taking upon himself a very large share of the work of the Judicial Committee. His judgments, which we have recently reported, shew that neither age nor health has to any degree impaired his judicial insight or his power of close reasoning and clear exposition. But it is doubtful whether he will be able to stand the severe strain of his duties for very much longer. Therefore, the question of the appointment of some more experts in Indian law has assumed some urgency. We understand from Mr. Chamberlain's announcement in the House of Commons that the opinion of the Government of India will be asked on the question. We would therefore urge both on the Home and the Indian Government the importance of selecting only such men as would command the confidence of the people of this country and maintain the high reputation that the Judicial Committee has established amongst them.

But the question of getting the best men is not free from difficulty. Sir Richard Couch is the only member of the Judicial Committee who gets any compensation, and that a very inadequate one, for the discharge of his arduous and highly responsible duties. The Statute 3 and 4, William IV, which established the Judicial Committee, makes provision under sec. 30, for the payment of £100 a year each to two Indian or Colonial judges who may be appointed by the Crown to attend the sittings of the Committee. This is hardly any inducement to any judge of any eminence to forego his rest and resume judicial duties of the most intricate and responsible character late in life.

In 1887 this was felt and by an Act of Parliament, 50 and 51 Vic., c. 70, sec. 4, it was provided that when there was but one Indian or Colonial judge in the Committee, who attended under 3 and 4 Will., c. 41, sec. 30, he might draw the two sums of £400. A sum of £800 a year is hardly an allowance befitting the position or responsibility of a member of the Judicial Committee. But as Sir Richard Couch had, even before Lord Hobhouse, accepted an unpaid membership in 1881, six years later when he was offered a compensation of £800 annually for his services he saw no reason to refuse it. But that this allowance is no inducement to men of his merit to accept a seat on the Judicial Committee, is sufficiently evident from the case of the first Chief Justice of Bengal. Sir Barnes Peacock, we believe, refused the offer of an unpaid membership as also that of compensation under 3 and 4, Will. IV, c. 41, sec. 30. The fact that the allowance of £400 or £800 is meant to be in addition to what an Indian or Colonial judge got for his pension, makes no difference; for, as Sir Barnes Peacock said, the judge did not get his pension for nothing but he had to earn it.

It was because of such difficulties that a statute was passed in 1871, 34 and 35 Vic, c. 91, empowering Her Majesty to appoint four members to the Committee on an annual salary of £5,000 each from amongst persons who had at any time occupied the position of judges in the Superior Courts in England or that of Chief Justices in Madras, Bombay or Bengal. Four members were accordingly appointed and out of them Sir Barnes Peacock and Sir James Colville represented India. This statute, however, provided that the appointments were to be made within twelve months and any vacancies to be filled, that might occur within two years. This statutory power was not revived after two years and with the death of Sir Barnes Peacock in 1894 the last of the paid members of the Committee disappeared.

Having regard to the present constitution of the Judicial Committee and to the recommendations of the conference held at the Colonial office we are of opinion that no time should be lost in strengthening the Indian representation in the Committee by the appointment of really competent members on a salary befitting their position. But India should no more be burdened with any additional charges on this account than are the colonies, especially, having regard to the fact that we already pay very heavy Home Charges whereas the colonies pay none. But since the appointment of some Indian experts to the Committee, on the same status and salary as the Lords of Appeals in Ordinary, cannot be made before a special statute can be got through both Houses of Parliament, no delay should be made on that account to appoint some suitable successor to Lord Hobhouse. We would venture to suggest that if either Sir Arthur Wilson or Sir Raymond West can be persuaded to become a member of the Committee under 3 and 4, Will. IV, c. 41, sec. 1, for the present, that will remove the scare that has been caused in India by the mention of the name of Sir John Edge in this connection. Having restored confidence in the Judicial Committee in this manner the Government might proceed to consider what further steps should be taken to secure a more adequate representation of India in its final court of appeal.

Review.

THE LAW RELATING TO HINDU WILLS. By Arthur Phillips, M. A., and E. J. Trevelyan, B. C. L., M. A. Publishers—W. Thacker & Co., 2, Creed Lane, London E. C. Thacker, Spink & Co., Calcutta (1901).

This work is divided into three parts. In the first part the learned authors, have discussed the principles of law applicable to Hindu Wills; while the second and third parts consist of annotated editions of the Hindu Wills Act and the Probate and Administration Act. As a book of reference it will be found highly useful, for all the leading cases dealing with Hindu Wills have been collected under various headings. In fact it may almost claim to be a digest of cases relating to Hindu Wills. Looking at the work in this light, the first chapter of the book dealing with the testamentary powers of Hindus seems to us to be somewhat superfluous. There the learned authors begin by stating that "the testamentary power of Hindus is now firmly established, apart from legislation" and then proceed to discuss very briefly the rise of testamentary power amongst Hindus. They do not, however, throw any fresh light on the subject. Having regard to the scope of the work, it also seems to us that some of the cases have been cited at somewhat unnecessary length and in consequence the work has become at places slightly cumbersome. It supplies however a long-felt want, for not only are the sections of the Succession Act that have been incorporated into the Hindu Wills Act printed in extenso but the leading cases dealing with the subject so far as Hindu Wills are concerned have been given in the notes appended to the various sections. The book shows great research and ought to prove a useful adjunct to the practitioner's library.

English Notes.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—DEVEY v. JOHN CORY. Before the LORD CHANCELLOR, LORD MACNAGHTEN, LORD SHAND, LORD DAVEY and LORD BRAMFON. 1st August 1901.

Director acting bona fide, but misled by the officials of the company—Heavy losses—Payment of dividends out of capital—Question of his liability.

The question in this case was between one of the directors of the National Bank of Wales, the Respondent, John Cory, and his fellow-shareholders.

The Appellant was the liquidator of that Bank. He had succeeded in obtaining an order from Mr. Justice Wright awarding against Mr. John Cory £54,000, for payments made during several years of dividends out of capital. Mr. John Cory was a director from 1883 to 1890. The Court of Appeal reversed that decision.

This was the liquidator's appeal from that decision releasing the Respondent from any liability. It was admitted before the House of Lords that no charge of fraud or moral obliquity was made against the Respondent, but the case against him and his liability was put on the ground of grave negligence as a director. It was argued that though he may not have known the true state of facts, he ought to have known them and his breach of duty in that respect rendered him liable. It was made the test of his responsibility that he did not find out what was fraudulently withheld from his knowledge. It was shown that he was in a network of conspiracy and fraud; warning letters of auditors had been kept back from his knowledge. He made enquiries from time to time but was deceived.

Their Lordships in their judgment were guarded as to laying down precise rules for the guidance or embarrassment of businessmen in their conduct of business affairs, and disclaimed assent to some of the propositions laid down by the Court of Appeal.

The LORD CHANCELLOR, inter alia, in a lengthy judgment said "Was Mr. Cory to turn himself into an auditor, a managing director, a chairman, and find out auditors, managing directors and chairman were all alike deceiving him. That the letters from the auditors were kept from him is clear, that he was assured that provision had been made for bad debts and that he believed such assurance is involved in the admission that he was guilty of no moral fraud; so that it comes to this that he ought to have discovered a network of conspiracy and fraud by which he was surrounded and found out that his own brother and the managing director (who have since been made criminally responsible) were inducing him to make representations as to the prospects of the concern and the dividends properly payable, which have turned out to be improper and false. I cannot think that it can be expected of a director that he should be watching the inferior officers of the bank, or verifying the calculations of the auditors themselves. The business of life could not go on if people could not trust those who are put into a position of trust for the express purpose of attending to details of management. If Mr. Cory was deceived by his own officers there appears to me to be no case against him at all."

PRIVY COUNCIL. Appeal from Madras. N. A. SUBRAMANYA IYER v. THE KING EMPEROR. 2nd August 1901. For facts and arguments refer to 5 C. W. N. cclxix.

Criminal Procedure Code, secs. 537, 234.

The LORD CHANCELLOR delivered their Lordships' judgment to-day wherein it is stated that the Petitioner had been tried upon an indictment in which he was charged with no less than 11 acts running over a period of two years; that was directly opposed to the express terms of sec. 234 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. That Code had provided that a person may only be tried for 3 offences of the same kind if committed within a period of twelve months. The course pursued was plainly illegal and such illegality cannot be amended by arranging afterwards what might or might not have been left to the jury. Disobedience to an express provision as to the mode of trial cannot be regarded as a mere irregularity.

The judgment then refers to certain observations of Lord Herschell and Lord Russell of Killowen in 1 Law Rep. App. Cases, 1891, p. 494, as regards the constitution of a suit not warranted by law with approval and concludes as follows:—

"With all respect to Sir Francis Maclean and the other Judges who agreed with him in the case of Abdur Rahman v. Keramat (L. R. 27 Cal. 839; s. c. 4 C. W. N. 656), he appears to have fallen into a very manifest logical error in arguing that because all irregularities are illegal, that therefore all things that may in his view be called illegal are therefore by that one adjective applied to them become equal in importance and are susceptible of being treated alike. But this trial was prohibited in the mode in which it was conducted, and their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty that the conviction should be set aside."

Ex parte IAN LOBEWYK MARAIS.

High treason—Construction of laws "repugnant to England"—Colonial Laws Validity Act, 1865—Constitution of Court—Acting Judge.

This was a petition of Marais for special leave to appeal from an order of the special Court at Natal convicting him for high treason and sentencing him to 12 months' imprisonment, which he was undergoing, and to a fine of £200, which he had paid. He was found guilty of having joined the Boer invading forces in the Klip River district of Natal, taken up arms for them, and accompanied and assisted them in the furtherance of the war.

His case was that soon after Ladysmith was invested by the Boer forces, Klip River district where he resided as a farmer was abandoned by the British forces; that he was left at the mercy of the Republican troops, they having taken complete control of the district and proclaimed Martial law. That he was commandeered by them and had to unwillingly perform police duty for them, but when the British re-occupied the place he refused to accompany the invaders in their retreat northwards.

He complained that he was tried by a Court wrongly constituted; he claimed the right of being tried by the English law and urged that he was wrongly tried by the Roman Dutch law.

The special tribunal which tried the Petitioner was one constituted under a Special Local Act 14 of 1900. That Act was passed under the then existing circumstances of the Colony to try persons charged with high treason. It provided for a special Court consisting of three Commissioners to sit at Natal.

Lord Coleridge, K. C., (Mr. W. Stocken and Mr. Renard with him) referred to the provisions of that Act, also of the Supreme Court Act, 1896, and submitted that the Court which tried the Petitioner was not properly constituted owing to there not being a member of the Supreme Court of the Colony on the commission; he urged that there was a marked distinction between an acting Judge and a permanent Judge of the Supreme Court. Lord Coleridge further argued that the Petitioner as an original settler in Natal carried with him the law of England, a right to a trial by a jury; that right he now claimed. Roman Dutch law was made applicable to the Colony at a much later date by a Colonial Statute, and it was not within the power of the Colonial Legislature to pass an act so repugnant to the law of England so as to deprive a person living in that Colony of the right to a jury trial. He referred to the Colonial Laws Validity Act, 1865, and to memorandum 9th August 1722 of a determination of the Privy Council reported in 2 Peere Williams, p. 74.

The Hon'ble J. W. Leonard, K. C., (with whom was Mr. Colfax) for the Natal Government was heard only on the question of the constitution of the Court.

The LORD CHANCELLOR said their Lordships were agreed that this application should be refused.

On the 2nd point his Lordship's judgment was mainly based on the Colonial Laws Validity Act, 1865, which his Lordship said was passed for the very purpose of getting rid of the difficulty suggested by Lord Coleridge.

The judgment then proceeded "referring to the Statute of 1865 which they had to construe and the words 'repugnant to the laws of England' were not to be construed in their bald sense, but with the new qualifications introduced in the interpretation clause. What was to be repugnant to the law of England within the meaning of those words, was a repugnancy to some Act of Parliament extending to the Colony to which such Colonial law might relate, or to any order or regulation made under such Act. The obvious purpose and meaning of the statute was to preserve the right of the Imperial Legislature to legislate for a Colony, although a local legislature had been given to it, and to make it impossible, when an Imperial Statute had been passed expressly for the purposes of a Colony, for a Colonial legislature in that sense to enact anything repugnant to what was an express law applied to the Colony by the Imperial legislature itself. As to the other argument with reference to legislation by a Colony which in some respects might run counter to or be repugnant to some law of the United Kingdom, that, if it were construed in a wide sense as Lord Coleridge suggested, would render the Colonial legislature illusory altogether, because it was hardly possible to deal with the right of any British subject by a local legislature which should not in some way or another run counter to some provision in this country which was enacted for a different purpose having no special reference to the circumstances of a particular Colony. That statement reconciled the principle of giving a local legislature, but nevertheless leaving it still open to the Imperial Legislature by express legislative provisions to do something in a Colony."

With regard to the first point his Lordship's judgment concludes as follows:—

"The Governor could not of his own motion appoint a person as an acting Judge. By the 28th section it must be at the request of the Chief Justice so that in order to preside or be one of the Commissioners they must have a person qualified to be a Judge, and the acting Judge must be appointed at the request of the Chief Justice. It was admitted that the Petitioner was tried by a person who was an acting Judge, and their Lordships were called upon to say that the Court was not properly constituted because one of the members of it was not permanently a Judge of the superior Court, but only an acting Judge within the meaning of the Act of Parliament. Their Lordships were not able to say that that prevented his being a Judge of the Supreme Court; and if he was a Judge the provisions of the statute were satisfied and the commission was properly constituted. For these reasons their Lordships would humbly advise His Majesty that no leave to appeal should be granted."

Leave refused.

Petition for special leave to appeal—Arbitration—Final decree.

The Appellant was the Petitioner and the Plaintiff in the suit, which he had instituted in the District Court of Colombo, against the abovenamed Fernando, to recover Rs. 43,317 as damages for breach of contract to deliver certain quantities of plumbago within a certain time. The Defendant denied that the plumbago in question should have been delivered within the dates alleged by Plaintiff; asserted that the contract had been cancelled by mutual agreement, and also denied that Plaintiffs had sustained the damages alleged by them.

Just previous to the date fixed for the hearing of the action and at the Defendant's suggestion the parties agreed to refer to the sole arbitration of the Hon'ble H. L. Wendt their whole dispute. The District Judge thereupon in accordance with the written agreement of the parties referred the matter in dispute to that gentleman for final decision as sole arbitrator.

Later on the District Judge extended, by an order of his, the time for the making of the award until the 15th March 1900; this was done on the joint motion of the parties.

And the first sitting of the arbitrator was fixed in communication with both parties for 28th February 1900.

On that day Plaintiff's representative heard from Defendant's representative that he would not attend the sitting, and on the same date the arbitrator heard from Defendant that on his counsel's advice he was unwilling to go to arbitration and desired withdrew from it.

Several sittings were held by the arbitrator, upon each occasion after due notice to Defendant, and evidence was taken by him.

On the 19th March 1900 the arbitrator filed his award in the Court of the District Judge deciding in favour of the Plaintiff.

Thereupon the Defendant petitioned that Court to set aside the award on the ground that he was under the bond fide impression when he arranged to let the matter be decided by arbitration that what was being referred to Mr. Wendt was for Mr. Wendt to suggest terms of settlement, which would be open to the parties to accept or reject.

That petition was dismissed by the District Judge on the 1st May 1900.

The Defendant thereupon appealed to the Supreme Court against such dismissal, and refusal to set aside the award.

While that appeal was pending on the 18th May 1900 the District Judge passed a decree in terms of the award.

The Defendant then put in an appeal against that order of the District Judge.

A Division Bench of the Supreme Court (The Chief Justice and another Judge) on the 4th July 1900 set aside the order of the District Judge of the 1st May 1900, and declaring the award a nullity, they remanded the cause for further proceedings. At the same time they dismissed the Defendant's appeal against the decree of the District Judge of the 18th May, on the ground that sec. 692 of the Civil Procedure Code, 1889, did not allow an appeal from such a decree; nevertheless the Court intimated that in their opinion the decree should not have been entered pending the appeal to them.

Plaintiffs thereupon prayed for leave to appeal to Her late Majesty in Council from such decision of the Supreme Court, and further prayed that upon the granting of such certificate the judgment of the Supreme Court might be brought up on review under sec. 782 of the Civil Procedure Code before the Supreme Court sitting collectively preparatory to that appeal.

On the 19th September 1900 that Divisional Bench after hearing both parties granted the certificate.

On the same day on motion of Defendant's counsel the same Court set aside the decree of the District Judge of 18th May; which as aforesaid had given effect to the award.

The case then came on before the Full Bench of the Supreme Court on 29th March 1901 for argument in review preliminary to the intended appeal to Her Majesty in Council.

And it was decided that the Court had no power to grant leave to appeal where the judgment decree or sentence sought to be appealed from was not a final decree or one having the effect of a final decree or definite sentence, and being of opinion that the certificate issued was per incuriam recalled the same declining to hear the review.

Petitioner submitted, inter alia, that the term per incuriam was wholly inapplicable here for the issue of the certificate was the deliberate act of two Judges after due notice to parties and hearing counsel on both sides and on motion expressly made for it.

That the collective Court had no power to recall the certificate at all events not without formal proceedings ad hoc, and therefore had no power to refuse to hear the case in review.

That if Petitioner was not entitled as of right to appeal from the several orders of the Supreme Court, that special leave should be granted because a question of law of great importance to the commercial community was involved in this case regarding reference to arbitration and the rendering nugatory of the submission made.

And Petitioners prayed for special leave to appeal from the orders of the Supreme Court of 4th July 1900, 19th September 1900, and 29th March 1901.

The Hon'ble J. W. Leonard, K. C., (with whom was Mr. F. H. M. Corbett) submitted that he was seeking leave to appeal from what was a final judgment, and was proceeding to explain the various orders made subsequent to the award when Lord Davey intimated that their Lordships were agreed that leave to appeal should be given.

Leave to appeal granted.

CALCUTTA HIGH COURT.

[CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION.]

APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE
No. 784 of 1899.

RAMPINI, J. } ASHUTOSH NATH ROY, Defendant, GUPTA, J. } Appellant,
1901. }
6, August. } SHEIKH ABDUL, Plaintiff, Respondent.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), Ch. X (former)—Settlement officer, rent recorded by, on application by zemindar for settlement of rents of raiyats—Ex parte order—Order, if binding on tenant who never objected—Res judicata—Limitation Act (XV of 1877), Arts. 14, 120, Sch. II—Suit for alteration of rent recorded—Certificate issued under Act I of 1895, cancellation or modification of, suit for.

This was an appeal preferred on the 26th April 1899, against the decree of Babu Kartik Chandra Pal, Subordinate Judge, 2nd Court, of Zillah Tipperah, dated the 11th January 1899, affirming the decree of Babu Girish Chandra Sen, Officiating Munsif of Brahmanberia, dated the 28th June 1898.

The facts of the case were as follows:—

There was a settlement of the Plaintiff's rent by a Settlement officer in May 1891. The Defendant applied for a settlement of his tenants' rents including that of the Plaintiff. The Plaintiff was found to be in possession of excess lands and the Settlement officer accordingly increased the Plaintiff's rent from Rs. 7 odd to Rs. 9-12. The Plaintiff raised no objection under sec. 105 of the old Chapter X of the Bengal Tenancy Act. He preferred no appeal to the Special Judge, but remained perfectly quiet. The Defendant's estates being, under the management of the Court of Wards, a certificate of the amount due for the rent of 1303 and 1304, B. S., due from the Plaintiff was issued in 1895-96. The Plaintiff then objected to this certificate but his objection was disallowed on the 25th January 1897. Plaintiff accordingly instituted the present suit on the 7th July 1897 for cancellation or modification of the certificate issued under Act I of 1895, which he pleaded was issued for an excessive amount and for recovery of a certain sum of money said to have been paid in excess of what was really payable by him.

Both the lower Courts held that the Plaintiff was not bound by the proceedings of the Settlement officer, that the latter had no right to raise the Plaintiff's rent and accordingly modified the certificate and gave the Plaintiff a decree for the recovery of a sum of Rs. 19-12.

The Defendant then preferred this appeal, and on his behalf it was contended (1) that the order of the Settlement officer, dated May 1891, had the effect of res judicata and (2) that the Plaintiff's suit for the alteration of his rent was barred by limitation.

On behalf of the Plaintiff it was contended that the order of the Settlement officer of May 1891 was an ex parte order, was passed without notice to him; that the order was not executed and that it could not have the effect of res judicata and that the suit was not barred by limitation inasmuch as it was a suit for cancellation of the certificate.

THE COURT held—That the decision of the Settlement officer in a proceeding in which the Defendant and the present Plaintiff were arrayed against each other, as Plaintiff and Defendant, and in which the officer took evidence and decided the question of Plaintiff's rent along with those of other tenants, had, under sec. 107 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, the force of a decree.

That it was an ex parte decree, the present Plaintiff not having appeared in the proceedings, and though it might not make the question of the Plaintiff's rent res judicata it was admissible in evidence and was good evidence as to the Plaintiff's rent.

That the period of limitation applicable for a suit for the alteration of Plaintiff's rent after a record of rights was finally published, is either Art. 14, Sch. II of the Limitation Act, which allows one year for the setting aside of the act of a Government officer in his official capacity not expressly provided for, or Art. 120, which prescribes six years as the period of limitation for a suit for which no period of limitation is prescribed elsewhere.

That the present suit having been instituted more than six years after the Plaintiff's rent was settled, the suit was barred by limitation, and that the Plaintiff ought not to be allowed to bring a suit for the alteration of his rent under the specious guise of a suit for the amendment of a certificate.

Babus Baidya Nath Dutt and Bepin Behary Ghose for the Appellant.

Mr. Rasool and Babu Jadu Nath Kanjilal for the Respondent.

Appeal allowed.

REPORTS (See Index.)

IT WILL BE NOTICED THAT THE DECISION OF THE FULL Bench in the case of Paresh Nath v. Nobogopal, reported at p. 821 of this issue, considerably enlarges the scope of sec. 310A of the Civil Procedure Code.

THE DECISION OF BANERJEE, J., IN THE CASE OF Shama Prosad Ghose v. Taki Mallick and ors., reported in our last issue (5 C. W. N. 816), where his Lordship held that the appointment of a pleader must be in writing and filed in Court but his acceptance of the vakalatnama need not be in writing, is worthy of note. We are sure that this decision will be found of considerable service in the mofussil.

DR. SCHRUSTER'S REMARKS, IN THE PAGES OF THE Journal of the Society of Comparative Legislation, with regard to the offence of lèse majesté and prosecutions on that account, apply with equal force, to the altered definition of sedition and prosecutions for the same.

The somewhat vague definition of the offence to which I have referred gives rise to another regrettable circumstance. The distinction between acts or utterances justified by law and those which are threatened with punishment is of a very subtle and delicate kind, and the Courts who have to administer the law find it very difficult in many cases to come to a conclusion which does not expose them to violent criticism. If they err on the side of severity, they are accused of currying favour with the authorities, upon whom the promotion of the judges to higher appointments depends. If, on the other hand, they acquit the accused in a doubtful case, they are said to be moved by the desire of obtaining cheap popularity with the masses. There is no doubt whatever that such accusations are, in nearly every case, idle calumnies; but the very fact of their existence shakes that confidence in the administration of justice on which the welfare of the community so largely depends.

WITH REGARD TO THE IMPOLICY OF PROSECUTIONS for such offences and the futility of punishments on such account, he further adds:—

Whenever acts criminally punishable do not shock the moral sense of the people among whom they are committed, persons suffering in respect of the commission of such acts are looked upon as martyrs, and no disgrace whatever attaches to the punishment which they suffer. The most loyal subjects of the Crown cannot view a person who refuses to rise when the King's health is proposed, or who, in criticising some Royal utterance, uses language more forcible than refined, as belonging to the same class as thieves and cardsharps, and if such a person receives punishment similar to that imposed upon real criminals, his bad manners or coarse utterances are forgotten in view of the exaggerated punishment, and he is apt to receive so much glorification on his departure from prison that the whole incident is subsequently looked upon with pleasure rather than with regret. Many of the deterrent effects of the punishment of lèse majesté are thus neutralised.

THE RECEIPTS OF GOVERNMENT IN STAMPS FOR FEES levied on law-suits during the past year, in Bengal alone, amounted to over 1½ crores of rupees.

Court Fee Stamps	1,23,14,310
Stamp for copies	6,91,470
Paper	2,73,275

TOTAL RS. . . . . 1,33,09,055

The net profit of Government from litigation from the Presidency of Bengal alone, amounts, we believe, to more than half a crore of rupees. It is a settled principle that the administration of justice should never be made a source of revenue. For, the heavier the taxation on justice the more inaccessible does it become to the people at large. It is but just that any surplus derived from such sources should be appropriated either in securing greater efficiency in the judicial or ministerial staff or in allowing the latter a more liberal scale of pay and last but not the least in reducing the fees levied on law-suits. We showed some years back, quoting the facts and figures published by the Society of Comparative Legislation, that the scale of fees in continental countries is much less than they are in India and that India, which is one of the poorest countries in the world, ranks with the richest—the United States and Great Britain—in this respect. We wish the Government would take note of this and revise the scale of fees and bring it within the means of the people of this country.

DR. RATHENAU OPENS HIS ARTICLE ON THE Education of Neglected Children in Germany, in the Journal of the Society of Comparative Legislation, with the following observations.

The opinion is more and more gaining ground that the most effective means of combating crime is not in subjecting children to treatment as criminals. More and more it is recognised that the real question is not how to improve youthful criminals after they have got within the meshes of the law, but to prevent them from becoming criminals. How little can be accomplished by the former method is shown by the increasing juvenile criminality in Germany.

According to the official Criminal Statistics for 1896, in the German Empire in the year 1882, 30,697, and in the year 1896, 43,982, "young persons"—i.e., between twelve and eighteen years—were punished for crimes and offences against the laws of the Empire (all minor offences are excepted). This means an increase of 43·2 per cent., and in relation to population an increase of 22 per cent. Crimes by adults increased during the same period only 34·1 per cent., or 16 per cent. relatively to population. A very considerable part of this increase is in convictions for dangerous injuries to the person (112·5 per cent.), for injuries to property (48 per cent.), and for using compulsion and threats (about 300 per cent.).

The figures are alarming! Happily we are better off. It is significant, however, that Germany is substituting educational in the place of punitive methods. Conviction, or punishment often deprives youths of self-respect and the sympathy of fellow-beings and they practically become social outcasts. In the continental countries experiments have for a long time been made, to treat juvenile offenders as merely truant children of the State. Regarded in that light they are put, until they come of age, under the guardianship-control of approved private families or in educational institutions kept by private individuals for the purpose and the results are said to be highly satisfactory. With such youths the authorities take even the care to obliterate from the records their names so that they may not in any way be prejudiced in their life's career on account of their past acts of indiscretion. Many such youths have been known in after-life to distinguish themselves in public service or in the army or navy, who but for such tender care of the State would have, perhaps, degenerated into hardened criminals. Germany being now convinced of the superiority of the educative method over the punitive, has recently had recourse to legislation for the reformation of youths by an elaborate system of guardianship education under State control. Juvenile offenders are not common in this country and there is no occasion for the State to adopt such measures here. It would be enough if our magistrates understood the spirit of the recent provisions of law in respect of youthful and first offenders. Whether the magistrates have taken advantage of these provisions will appear from our review of a recent resolution by the Bengal Government in this connection.

THE PROVISIONS OF LAW AS TO JUVENIL AND FIRST OFFENDERS AND THE TARDINESS OF OUR MAGISTRATES IN GIVING EFFECT TO THEM.

Seven weeks ago we noticed how with the growth of knowledge about crime and criminals, the idea and character of punishment had undergone change in the course of the last century. In no other direction is this change more marked than in the treatment of youthful and juvenile offender in Europe and America. The wave of this reform reached us from these distant shores only towards the close of the last century. It was to a certain extent at our instance that the retrograde legislation which marked both the Reformatory School Act (VIII of 1897) and the Criminal Procedure Code (V of 1898) was somewhat compensated by the introduction of some belated provisions in respect of youthful and first offenders. The Reformatory Schools Act, which sought in an unprecedented manner to shut out appeals to superior courts against magisterial orders for detention in Reformatory Schools, met with most uncompromising criticism in these columns, and by way of compromising Mr. Chalmers introduced sec. 31 for counteracting this evil by empowering, amongst others, the superior courts to nullify such magisterial orders by discharging youthful offenders after due admonition or by making them over to parents or guardians on executing a bond for their good behaviour for twelve months. Thus came some good out of evil. Similarly when our Penal Code and Code of Criminal Procedure underwent revision curtailing the liberty of speech and freedom of thought and augmenting the powers of the magistrate and the police, there was a general outcry against such retrograde measures and as a sop from the same source came sec. 562 of the Code of Criminal Procedure embodying the principles of the English First Offenders Act.

Such is the history of progressive legislation in British India in recent times. But yet it is so very inconsistent with the spirit of the administrators of criminal law in this country that it has failed to make any impression upon them. They are trained in a school where they are taught that the object of a trial is conviction, and that every conviction should be followed by punishment. To them the provisions of law which offer to an offender, youthful or mature in years and understanding, an opportunity for reformation seem meaningless. We have year after year tried to explain the policy of the new law and sought to draw the attention of the lower judiciary to it, but it seems to no purpose.

We had also drawn the attention of the Bengal Government in reviewing its Resolution of 1898 to the Reformatory Schools Act (3 C. W. N. xcxlvii) and the Government in its turn called for statistics relating to cases dealt with under the new revision of law, but we regret to notice that though three years have elapsed since then, yet no information is forthcoming. The Government of Bengal does not evidently appreciate the disregard with which its instructions have apparently been treated by its subordinates. In its recent Resolution to the Reformatory Schools dated the 6th of July 1901 we find,

"The Lieutenant-Governor notices with surprise that the recent report is silent as to whether the Commissioners of divisions have submitted reports showing how far the provisions of sec. 31 of Act VIII of 1897 and of sec. 562, Criminal Procedure Code, were utilised by trying magistrates. His information was expressly required in the orders on the reformatory Report for 1898."

The reticence of the Divisional Commissioner may be due to the fact that no figures are forthcoming, but the mofussil magistrates consider it perhaps a necessity of a trial to release an accused for his being a first offender, or to discharge a youth with admonition for any act of indiscretion or to make him over to his parents or relatives for being of good behaviour instead of sending him to prison for subjecting him to lashes in vindication of their authority. It is not merely that many magistrates ignore the sections, but we have come to know in the course of reporting cases, that there are others who are altogether ignorant of their very existence. When many of them do not care to follow the changes in the law, we doubt whether their attention can be directed to the policy and purpose of it by the observations made in a Government Resolution, published in the rarely read pages of the Gazette. If, however, the Government issued a circular drawing the attention of the mofussil magistracy to the revision of law, we might expect better results.

It is all the same, a matter for congratulation that the record of crime amongst us continues to be low as compared with other countries and that juvenile criminality still stands at a figure that is almost negligible. In this province of over 70 millions of soul the total number of admission of youthful offenders to Reformatory Schools during the past year was only 128. This unfortunately shows, however, an upward tendency, the admission during the previous year being only 99. But the Lieutenant-Governor suspects that, perhaps, this increase may be due to the fact of the magistrates not having availed themselves of sec. 31 of the Reformatory Schools Act and sec. 562 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

If, however, we compare these figures with the figures of juvenile criminality in Germany, which we publish in another column, we may justly feel proud of our boys and girls. Yet how striking is the contrast between the treatment they receive here and in the continental countries. There they do not so much punish as endeavour to reclaim their youths from an evil course. This solicitude for their well-being is said to have produced most excellent results. Our Government is not wanting in this solicitude, but our magistrates will want a great deal of persuasion to recognise the principle that the prevention of crime is by far preferable to the indiscriminate infliction of punishment.

Reviews.

AN EPITOME OF LEADING CASES IN EQUITY, founded on White and Tudor's selection. By W. H. Hastings Kelke, M. A. Published by Sweet and Maxwell, Ltd., 3, Chancery Lane, Law Publishers, 1901.

Mr. Kelke's little books have proved very useful and we welcome this addition to our Library. The author has succeeded in his aim, namely, that of giving the student an outline of Equity as settled or illustrated by selected leading cases. The arrangement is not alphabetical as in White and Tudor, but the author has grouped the subject under different heads, such as Trusts, Administration, Mortgages, Partnership, Infants, Waste, &c., &c. The leading principles have been clearly enunciated but in some cases the notes may have been made more copious. It is somewhat difficult for a beginner to understand the full effect or value of principles when they take the shape of formulae. The author has throughout tried to compress what he had to say within a small compass. Abbreviations are sometimes useful, but "Ejy" for "Equity" hardly economises any space and in a printed work seems to be somewhat out of place. We should like to see this book in an enlarged form.

* A PRACTICAL AND CONCISE MANUAL OF THE LAW RELATING TO PRIVATE TRUSTS AND TRUSTEES. By Arthur Underhill, M. A., LL. D. Published by Butterworth & Co., 12, Bell-yard, Temple Bar, W. C., Law Publishers, 1901.

This is the Fifth Edition of Dr. Underhill's work. Mr. Lewin's elaborate treatise on the subject is well-known to the profession, but its bulk is not ordinarily very inviting. A concise treatise on the subject has always been a great want, and the present work in which the principles of the law have been extracted and formulated, has met that want. The author has rightly preferred modern cases to ancient ones, following Sir George Jessel's dictum in re Hallet. The present edition contains fewer pages than the last, but as the author explains, the change is due partly to an alteration in the type and size of the page and partly to increased brevity in the statement of the illustrations. Some idea of the labour of producing such a work can be gathered from the fact that the table of cases cited, extends in small print over forty-four pages. We recommend the work to our readers as a practical treatise and as particularly useful both for study and reference.

INDIAN ARBITRATION ACT (IX of 1899). By H. N. Morison, Esq., Bar-at-Law. Published by Thacker, Spink & Co., 1901.

This is a neat little work and nicely got up. Mr. Morison has incorporated in it all the Statute Law in force in British India upon the subject of arbitration, and the rules framed by the High Courts of Calcutta and Bombay. The author has not been able to include the rules of the Madras High Court and the Chief Court of Burmah, as they were under consideration when the work was published. The references given will prove helpful to the profession. There has been some confusion owing to the recent amendments in the law relating to arbitration, as contained in the Civil Procedure Code, but when it is remembered that the present Arbitration Act (IX of 1899) only relates to arbitration by agreement without the intervention of a Court of Justice, much of the confusion should disappear. Mr. Morison's book should also prove useful to mercantile firms, as it is not burdened with technicalities.

A HAND-BOOK OF CIVIL LAW. By N. K. Ramasami Aiyar, B. A., B. L., Fakil, High Court, Madras. Printed by P. C. Kalliyasundara Nadar and published by G. A. Natesan & Co., Madras. Price Re. 1.

This is the Second Edition of the work, which is in the form of questions and answers. We find the Law of Property, Contracts, Equity, Torts, Evidence, and Civil Procedure, all treated in the same way as also the subject of Hindu Law. The author has evidently been at great pains in preparing the work, but the form is unsatisfactory, except for students going up for their examinations, who will no doubt find it of assistance.

THE INDIAN REGISTRATION ACT. By Desai Narotam, Pleader, High Court, Bombay. Printed at the Tatwa-Vivechaka Press. Price Rs. 4. 2nd Edition, 1901.

In spite of several works on the subject, we welcome this one as a valuable addition to them. The arrangement is very praiseworthy and the appendices will be found useful. The notes have been carefully arranged and cases followed by, distinguished or dissented from, in any subsequent case have been specially referred to. We find the book very convenient for reference, as the head-notes of cases have been given in full and arranged under separate headings printed in clear, bold, black type. It is handy in every way. We note that the case law has been brought up to the end of December 1900. The get-up and printing are also excellent.

Madras Notes.

In the case of Rec. v. Veeraperumal Pillai and another, tried at the last August Sessions of the High Court at Madras, the learned Chief Justice (Sir Arnold White) passed decision on three points of considerable importance. The first related to sec 408 of the Indian Penal Code. The second to sec 477 of the same and the third to the value legally to be attached to averments in statements made by the accused at the close of the prosecution before the committing Magistrate.

The facts of the case bearing on these points as stated by the prosecution were as follows:—

The complainant (the first witness on behalf of the prosecution) and the first accused were co-executors of an estate. The second accused—a nephew of the first accused—kept the accounts of the estate for a remuneration and under the direction of the first accused. On 16th October last, a sum of Rs. 65 and odd was received by the first accused from one Mr. Martin, a vacating tenant of the estate for the broken period of 19 days of the month. The second accused, in making entries on the 18th idem, entered only Rs. 32 and odd and as rent received for 10 days. On this being discovered by the complainant on 20th idem, the figure 32 and odd and the words "ten days" were erased and the correct figure and words were substituted in the handwriting of second accused. The first accused was a party to it.

On these allegations, the first accused was charged among other things, with the offences under secs 408 and 477A, the prosecution contending (1) that an executor came under sec. 408 as a servant of the estate and (2) that he fell within the term "officer" in sec. 477A, as every executor is an officer of Court to which he has to render accounts.

The learned Chief Justice in disapproval of these contentions held (1) that an executor is not a servant within the meaning of sec. 408 and (2) that, as he cannot be said to be employed by Court to keep accounts and as he had no other "employer" as contemplated by the section, the first accused was not rightly charged under sec. 477A.

The third point arose in consequence of the accused having stated before the committing Magistrate that the wrong figure originally entered was, not Rs. 32 and odd as rent for 10 days, but Rs. 56 and odd as rent for 17 days. This statement as to the entry being for Rs. "56 and odd for 17 days" was repudiated before the Sessions Court as incorrect and it was also found to be manifestly false.

It was contended for the prosecution that the accused were bound by their original statement and that the question reduced itself to whether the original figure was Rs. 32 and odd or Rs. 56 and odd. It was further contended that, inasmuch as it appeared conclusively that the figures Rs. "56 and odd" were not there, the only conclusion that could be arrived at was that the prosecution had established their case that Rs. "32 and odd" was originally entered.

The learned CHIEF JUSTICE held on this point that, though the averments in the statements of the accused might be taken into consideration, they were not legal evidence. That the proved falsity of Rs. "56 and odd" having been in the accounts, did not take away from the prosecution the onus of proving affirmatively and by reliable evidence that the figure Rs. "32 and odd" was originally entered which is the gist of the offence of falsification of account books.

English Notes.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—GEORGE WHITECHURCH, LIMITED v. CAVANAGH. Before the LORD CHANCELLOR, LORDS MACNAGHTEN, SHAND, JAMES OF HEREFORD, BRAMPTON and ROBERTSON.

Estoppel—Company law—Certification and certificate—Representations of secretary and of managing director.

The Respondent, Cavanagh, sued for damages from the Appellant Company for refusal to place him on its register of shareholders. The question for determination was whether the Company was bound by the representations made by those appeals. The Court of Appeal held that the Company was estopped. The Company appealed.

The alleged estoppels were distinct and were separately dealt with in the judgment of their Lordships. That relating to the secretary Wells arose under the following circumstances: One Raymond had undertaken to transfer to the Respondent certain preference and certain ordinary shares in the Appellant Company. The transfers made by Raymond were certified by Wells in the usual way; they containing under his signature as secretary that the coupons or certificates of the shares purporting to be dealt with were at the Company's office, as a matter of fact no certificate whatever had been lodged at the office to meet the sales nor were any certificates forthcoming to meet the transfers executed by Raymond. Wells was Raymond's servant and was aware that Raymond's dealings were fraudulent. He was in conspiracy with Raymond.

LORD MACNAGHTEN's judgment which was accepted by the Lord Chancellor on such facts proceeds:—

"Is the Company bound by the representation of their secretary. That must depend upon what authority the secretary had or was held out as having. Now the duties of the secretary of a Company are well understood. They are of a limited and of a somewhat humble character. 'A secretary,' said Lord Esher, is a mere servant. His position is that he is to do what he is told and no person can assume that he has any authority to represent anything at all (Barret v. South London Tramway Co., 18 Q. B. D. 817). In the present case the secretary was not even on the pay of the Company, at least not directly. The Company it seems was provided with an office and a secretary by another Company which appears to have been under Raymond's control. No doubt the practice of certifying transfers is a convenient one. It facilitates dealings in shares in the stock exchange and so facilitates indirectly to increase the value of the shares as a marketable commodity. But in permitting its secretary to certify transfers, it cannot be supposed that a Company authorises the secretary to do more than to give a receipt for certificates which are actually lodged in the office. I cannot think that a Company is estopped by the certification of its secretary if he gives an acknowledgment for certificates which have not been lodged with him". . . . . There is a marked difference between a certificate and a certification, a certificate is under the seal of the Company. By the Company's Act 1862 a certificate is prima facie evidence of title. A certification stands on a different footing altogether. Transfers are never certified under the Company's seal there is no obligation on a Company to certify transfers at all, the certification is not passed by the directors or brought before the Board. A certification is only required for temporary purposes to meet the exigencies of business of the stock exchange . . . . . It seems to me that it would be most unreasonable, in any case, whether the transaction takes place on the stock exchange or not, to hold a Company estopped by the certification of its secretary, if the secretary certifies a transfer without having received certificates. The supposed estoppel, therefore, founded on Wells' certification fails altogether, and for the same reason the case founded on alleged misrepresentation by the Company fails also."

As regards the alleged estoppel by the representations of the managing director the facts are complicated but the following portion of the judgment of that noble Lord is sufficient to indicate the salient facts and explains the grounds of his decision "I must confess I am utterly at a loss to see any ground upon which an estoppel can be raised against the Company. To begin with what authority had George Whitechurch, to make any representation in regard to those certified transfers which could bind the company. He was no doubt the managing director. The commercial business of the Company was entrusted to him. But no body can suppose that this was commercial business. I put that aside. Then I have always understood that a representation to bind anybody as an estoppel, must be a representation of an existing fact, or rather a representation as to some fact alleged to be in existence, and not to promises de futuro. What was it that Whitechurch represented as an existing fact? That Wells was the secretary of the Company and that the certification on the certificate was signed by him; well that was perfectly true. That Wells had actually received the necessary certificates? It is absurd to suppose that Whitechurch was asked to guarantee that. He had no reason to doubt Wells' honesty, and naturally took it for granted that Wells would not have given a receipt for that which he had not received. The Master of the Rolls seems to think that the representation attributed to Whitechurch was a representation to the effect that the Company, or the board of directors would act on the certified transfer without requiring more. That is not a representation of an existing fact. If it is anything it is a promise de futuro which cannot be an estoppel. The doctrine of estoppel by representation is a very old head of equity. It has been discussed not unfrequently in this house—notably in the case of Jordan v. Money, to which Lord Selborne was constantly in the habit of referring. It is founded on a broad principle which enters so deeply into the ordinary dealings and conduct of mankind that I sometimes rather doubt whether any great advantage is to be gained by endeavouring to reduce it to rules such as those which have been formulated in the case of Carr v. L. & N. W. Railway Company. Perhaps some of the difficulty which have gathered round the present case have come from clinging to rules rather than attending to principles."

The other Lords concurred.

COURT OF APPEAL.—STACY v. HILL. Before the MASTER OF THE ROLLS, LORDS JUSTICES COLLINS and ROMER. 1st March 1901.

In re FINLEY (21 Q. B. D. at p. 482 quoted) followed.

One Thomas Chapman was the lessee of a house in Sheffield which Plaintiff had let to him for 5 years from X'mas day 1898. The Defendant for such lease to Chapman gave to Plaintiff a guarantee regarding "the payment of so much rent as may be from time to time in arrear for 21 days to a sum not exceeding £140. This guarantee to remain concurrently in force with the lease for a period of 5 years from X'mas 1898."

The rent stipulated in the lease was £280 a year, some months after taking such lease Chapman was adjudicated a bankrupt, and a trustee was thereupon appointed. On February 15th, 1900, the trustee disclaimed the lease. The Plaintiff's agent had received the key of the premises and had advertised it for sale, that was all the evidence there was of Plaintiff resuming possession thereof.

The action was commenced to recover rent for one quarter to Lady day 1900. The question for determination was the effect of the disclaimer. Mr. Justice Phillimore after deciding that Plaintiff had not resumed possession had held that by such disclaimer the lessee was released from liability to pay rent, that as the Defendant's guarantee only extended to the payment of rent in arrear, there was no liability under the guarantee for any rent after the disclaimer.

The Plaintiff having failed presented this appeal.

THE COURT OF APPEAL following the above-mentioned case supported the decision of Mr. Justice Phillimore. The Legislature intended as between the lessor and lessee to draw the line at the date of the disclaimer; and the incidental result of discharging the lessee, was to discharge the surety, leaving the lessor to prove against the bankrupt's estate for any damage which he might have been put to, owing, for instance, to his inability to let the premises on as good a rent as previously.

Mr. Sylram Mayer for the Appellant.

Mr. Montagu Lush for the Respondent.

Appeal dismissed with costs.

COURT OF APPEAL.—KLANBER v. WEILL. Before the MASTER OF THE ROLLS, LORDS JUSTICES COLLINS and ROMER. 12th March 1901.

Execution of garnishee order—Company in voluntary liquidation.

The Plaintiff had obtained in January 1899 judgment for £67 against the Defendant Weill. A limited liability company called Tenter and Company owed Weill £400. Previous to Plaintiff securing his judgment against Weill that company had resolved to voluntarily wind up. At the end of January 1899 the Plaintiff attached all debts due from the company to the Defendant Weill, obtaining a garnishee order nisi. This order was made subsequently absolute. The liquidator of the company at that time did not raise the objection that a garnishee order could not be made against a company in liquidation; on his objection, which was allowed, it was ruled that "execution was not to issue without further order."

Plaintiff thereafter being advised that the liquidator had a certain sum of money to distribute as dividend to the Defendant Weill applied for leave to issue execution on the garnishee order. Mr. Justice Day granted that application and on this appeal on behalf of the said company it was contended that there was no power to allow execution of such an order against a company in voluntary liquidation.

THE COURT refused to accede to such contention; it was clear that the company had been properly garnished by the judgment-creditor in this case. When the Plaintiff called upon the company to show cause why they should not pay to him the debt due from them to the Defendant, the liquidator did not raise the objection now raised on behalf of the company. If the liquidator at that time had taken such an objection possibly it might have prevailed, but it was not necessary to decide that point. In what the Plaintiff was doing he was not interfering with the liquidation. Mr. Justice Day was right under the circumstances in taking off the stay of execution and allowing Plaintiff the money in the hands of the liquidator. The liquidator was not the debtor and therefore no order could be made against him, but execution should issue against the company unless the dividend be paid within 14 days by the liquidator to Plaintiff.

Mr. Dobb for the Company in support of the appeal.

Mr. Solomon for the Plaintiff.

Appeal failed and was dismissed with costs.

COURT OF APPEAL.—WHITBOURNE v. WILLIAMS. Before the MASTER OF THE ROLLS and LORDS JUSTICES VAUGHAN WILLIAMS and STIRLING. 24th July 1901.

Seduction—Foundation for action—Loss of service—Girl in Defendant's service—Seduced by him in his premises—Regularly visiting her parents and doing some service there.

THOMPSON v. ROSS (5 H. and N. 16, 29) followed.

The Plaintiff's daughter entered the Defendant's service in June 1900 to assist him at the bar and also do household work. The Defendant was a publican and seduced the girl at his own premises; the girl used to receive weekly wages, and was allowed under agreement with the publican to go out twice in each week. She used to spend such time at her parent's house, and assisted them at home on looking after the children during those visits. She left Defendant's service in September. The father brought this action for damages for the seduction of his daughter.

Mr. Justice Darling and a common jury had held that no loss of service was established and gave judgment for Defendant. This was the Plaintiff's application for a new trial.

THE COURT OF APPEAL held that Mr. Justice Darling was right: Thompson v. Ross (5 H. and N. 16, 29) was conclusive of this case. The question really came to this, did a household servant when she went out on leave ceased to be the servant of her master, the answer was she did not; that was really expressly decided in the above case.

Mr. Stephen Lynch in support of the application for new trial.

Mr. Charles Stempson opposing.

C. W. A. Application refused with costs.

CHANCERY DIVISION.—Re HENRY LOVIBOND AND SONS (1900), LIMITED. Before MR. JUSTICE JOYCE. 1st March 1901.

Company law—Removal of name from list of shareholders—Abortive amalgamation.

The above company was incorporated on July 20th, 1900. It took over the old company Henry Lovibond and Son, Limited, and the Phoenix Companies properties. Mr. Robert Hicks was a mortgagee of several public houses belonging to the said Phoenix Company. These were also taken over by the new company abovenamed. In pursuance of an agreement with this new company, Mr. Hicks applied for 900 fully-paid preference shares and 50 ordinary shares in the new company. These were allotted to him. The allotment contained the statement "payment satisfied by agreement of settlement." The promotion of the new company fell through and the old company was in liquidation. Mr. Hicks now applied that the register of shareholders of the above company be rectified by striking out his name as a shareholder, contending that the real bargain between him and the new company was that on the amalgamation being carried out he would become a shareholder in the new company which was the amalgamated company. The contract for the shares fell through because there was no amalgamation. The Defendants urged that Plaintiff may have a remedy against the company for damages owing to non-fulfilment of their obligation, but he had no right to have his name removed from the list of shareholders.

The learned Judge decided in Plaintiff's favour and directed the removal of his name.

Mr. Younger, K. C., and Mr. Wright for the Plaintiff.

Mr. Stewart Smith for the Defendant.

Application granted.

Notes of Cases.

(The important ones to be fully reported hereafter.)

PRIVY COUNCIL.

[APPEAL FROM ALIAHABAD.]

LORD HOBHOUSE.

LORD DAVEY.

LORD ROBERTSON.

SIR RICHARD COUCH

1901.

21st June.

BAHADUR SINGH and others,

Plaintiffs, Appellants,

v.

PERTAB SINGH and NUND LAL,
Defendants, Respondents.

Hindu widow's estate—Revision—Alienation—Custom—Weight of evidence.

This was as an appeal from a decree of the High Court for the North-Western Provinces reversing that of the Sub-Judge of Dehra Dun.

In this case the Plaintiffs, claiming as the next-of-kin of one Mehr Singh, deceased, sued for the ejection of the Defendants from the Galjwari jungle and claimed that they might be put in possession of the said jungle. The Defendant, Pertab Singh, died after the institution of the suit, and was now represented by his minor son Balbir Singh. Similarly Chetu, one of the original Plaintiffs, died and was represented by Hira Singh and Ranjit Singh, his brothers and heirs, who were already Plaintiffs.

The grounds on which the Plaintiffs based their suit are these. Their kinsman, Mehr Singh, died many years ago, leaving a widow Musammat Pritu, who eventually succeeded to the possession of his estate, whether directly after his death or after some interval, is not quite clear. The jungle of Galjwari now in dispute formed a portion of the estate which came into the widow's possession, and on the 29th November 1862 the widow gave out a cutting lease of the Galjwari jungle and of the Dulas and Gajawala jungles to Nund Lal and Ram Nath; Nund Lal being one of the Defendants in this case, and Ram Nath, a predecessor of the Defendants. The period of this lease expired on the 29th November 1892. The widow, Musammat Pritu, died in May of the same year.

After the expiry of the lease the Plaintiffs interfered with the Defendants' possession of the jungles which resulted in the Defendants' suing the Plaintiffs under sec. 9 of the Specific Relief Act. Defendants won their suit, and obtained a decree for possession of Galjwari, and are now in possession. The plaint denied that Defendants were, as they claimed to be, owners of the Galjwari jungle. The Plaintiffs' case was, therefore, that being the next-of-kin of Mehr Singh, now surviving, and being the reversioners of Mehr Singh's widow, Musammat Pritu, they were entitled to the property in dispute.

In reply the Defendants asserted that Musammat Pritu was the absolute owner of the estate, and did not occupy the position of an ordinary Hindu widow with respect to the estate. Further, they alleged that Mehr Singh was succeeded after his death by Musammat Nundo (his aunt) and Pritu did not succeed to the estate till Nundo's death. It was also pleaded that Musammat Pritu was excluded from family inheritance on account of misconduct, and that the possession she assumed was forcible and adverse to the Plaintiffs and their predecessors. Further, it was pleaded, that apart from the fact of Pritu's exclusion from inheritance, all transfers of property which she made were justifiable in view of the customary law of the Dun, by which Hindu widows used to be able to alienate their husbands' estate absolutely. Again, it was pleaded that after the grant of the lease already referred to, Musammat Pritu disposed of the proprietary rights in the jungles of Galjwari, Gajawala and Dulas to one Major Delane. Delane subsequently conveyed his right, title and interest to the Defendants. They plead that the transfer to Delane was further justified on the ground of necessity, and therefore the Plaintiffs cannot succeed in upsetting the transfer. If Plaintiffs deny the sale to Delane, still the Defendants have acquired a prescriptive title on the ground of adverse possession for over 12 years. Lastly, they pleaded that as they purchased in good faith and for consideration, the Plaintiffs are not entitled to possession without giving compensation to Defendants for improvements and other expenses incurred by them.

By way of counter-reply Plaintiffs pleaded:—

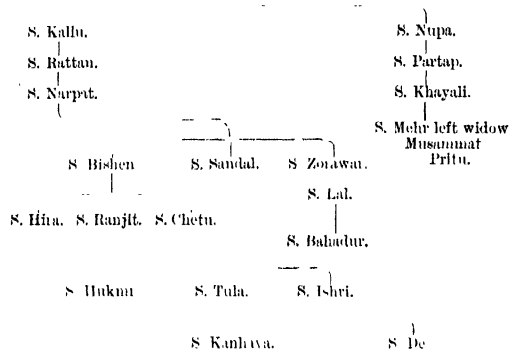

1. That Musammat Pritu made no transfer to Delane to their knowledge;

2. Even if made, it was made without lawful necessity, and is therefore void as against the reversioners.

3. That Plaintiffs were not aware of any transfer made by Delane to the Defendants.

The genealogical table is as follows:—

HUKMAT.

The Sub-Judge decided that there was no reason to doubt that the Plaintiffs' evidence made out their descent satisfactorily and after rejecting the suggestion of Pritu's misconduct and expulsion he said that he was satisfied that Pritu got possession of Mehr Singh's property as his widow; Nundo appeared to have looked after the estate, Pritu being then very young; on the death of Nundo, Pritu assumed the management. He held that Pritu had conveyed the jungles in dispute to Major Delane who had conveyed them to the Defendants. He decided that her alienation was not justified by any proved custom or for any legal necessity. And, lastly, he found that Defendants could claim no higher title than Delane's and that they had no equity to demand any compensation.

The High Court on Defendants' appeal dealt only with Plaintiffs' title which they considered was not made out.

Mr. Mayne for Appellant contended that the judgment of the High Court was against the weight of the evidence. The Appellants' title had been made out and the judgment of the first Court upon all points was correct.

Respondents were not represented.

REPORTS (See Index.)

AT ONE TIME WE WERE APPREHENSIVE THAT DEMOCRATIC laws and institutions might in course of time seriously interfere with individual liberty of action. Hence, we welcome the recent assurance given by their Lordships in the House of Lords (Taff Vale case 5 C. W. N., ante p. 291 and in Quinn v. Leatham, post p. 323) that law would not look upon coercion, annoyance, damages and wrong by a body of men, combined though they be for lawful purpose, with any more lenient eye than it does on similar acts of oppression by individuals. Tyranny by a community of men is not less galling and odious than is tyranny by an individual. We only echo the sentiments of the Lord Chancellor when we say that if any system of laws tolerated tyranny of either kind, it must be declared unfit for any civilized community. Lord Lindley's judgment has a ring of philosophy in it which we admire no less than his exposition of the law. We wish that the judgments in our Courts in India had more of such broad principles in them and less of hair-splitting.

WE NOTE THAT THE JUDGMENT OF MR. GEIDT IN Express v. Sadak Ali has been upheld by the High Court. This shows that Mr. Penell's judgment was substantially correct. With the irrelevant matters in the latter's judgment, whether they be the result of ill-health or of ill-treatment, we have but little concern. All the same it is a matter of great regret that the High Court did not evidently regard such matters with the same unconcern and all its errors of judgment in this connection can only be explained on that supposition alone. We pointed out at the time that the order for retrial by Ameer Ali and Pratt, JJ., was not warranted by law and our view, besides receiving general acceptance, may finally be said to have received support from the result of the appeal of N. A. Subramanya Iyer to the Judicial Committee. The order for the retrial of Sadak Ali was fundamentally bad and what was still more unfortunate was, that the High Court should have thought it fit to give directions to the Court below as to the probable findings of fact. Now that the case has been finally determined, we do not feel any hesitation in saying that Mr. Geidt acted in an eminently judicial spirit in taking no notice of the unwarranted suggestions of the High Court and in directing the assessors to ignore them and to proceed with the trial with a fresh mind. That the views of two successive judges of the Court below, aided by two different sets of assessors, have finally been confirmed by the High Court, in supersession of its own, reflects credit on both. Mr. Geidt's view deserves special mention from another point of view. It is a time-honoured principle of the English criminal law that a man must not be put to the penalty of his life or limb more than once on one and the same charge. This is why English judges do not as a rule remand criminal cases. Mr. Geidt in loyalty to the Superior Court, no doubt, held a new trial but with the true instincts of an English judge refrained from making the prisoner pay the penalty with his life.

THE CASE OF Gya Singh v. Mohamed Solomon, reported in this issue at page 864, is suggestive of the evils of the present system under which our Magistrates play the part of a police officer at one time, and that of a judicial officer at another. So much has been said against the system and so little in its favour that it seems to be almost a superfluity to add to the literature on the subject. But when an authority like Mr. Pitt-Taylor in his well known treatise on the Law of Evidence embodies a warning why a policeman or an investigating officer's view should not be readily accepted and in doing so, the reasons he advances tell even more effectively against the system under which investigating officers are allowed in India to sit in judgment at criminal trials, we feel bound to point out that its very policy, in the opinion of experts, is opposed to the fundamental principles of the law of evidence. Speaking of circumstantial evidence and presumption of guilt the learned author enters into the following analysis as to how and why an investigating officer is apt to misjudge even innocent words and actions of the accused (Taylor on Evidence, 9th Ed., Vol. I, pp. 67-68).

"Something, occurs to raise a suspicion against a particular party. Constables and police-officers are immediately on the alert, and with professional zeal ransack every place and paper, and examine into every circumstance which can tend to establish, not his innocence, but his guilt. Presuming him guilty from the first, they are apt to consider his acquittal as a tacit reflection on their discrimination or skill, and, with something like the feeling of a keen sportsman, they determine if possible to bag their game. Though both sportsman and policeman would be horrified at anything unfair or 'unsportsmanlike,' yet, as both start with this object in view, it is easy to unintentionally misrepresent innocent actions, to misunderstand innocent words, for men readily believe what they anxiously desire, and to be ever ready to construe the most harmless facts as confirmations of preconceived opinions."

The system at present in vogue in India has no support either in reason or in authority, and it is a matter of wonder to us why a Viceroy of such keen common sense should feel any hesitation about doing away with it. It is but natural that men who have been trained under the system should be opposed to any changes but that the Viceroy should allow such biased opinion to outweigh the clear dictates of reason is more than we can believe. If His Excellency should bring about the separation of the executive and judicial functions in our magistrates he will be remembered in India for this act alone. But should he leave India without giving effect to his original intentions it may be said that it was, perhaps, through the irritation caused by the unfortunate conduct of a particular officer that a great principle was sacrificed.

IN CONNECTION WITH THE QUESTION OF RESTRICTING appeals merely by money-value, we pointed out some time ago that it was a very unreliable standard for estimating the importance of appeals. We find the English Law Journal answering the letter of the last Surviving Member of the Judicature Commission to the Times on somewhat similar lines.

A plea for the restriction of the right of appeal is urged by 'The Surviving Member of the Judicature Commission,' in a lengthy letter which appeared in the Times a few days ago. 'It seems clear,' he writes, 'that there should not be the same unrestricted right of appeal to the highest tribunal in an action to recover 100l. as in an action to recover 100,000l.' We confess that the desirability of such a money limit in appeals to the House of Lords seems to us anything but clear. It is true that 'wealthy or unscrupulous' parties to small actions have sometimes abused the right of appeal to the highest Court in the land, but it is evident that an even larger measure of injustice might result from restricting the right to cases in which large sums are at stake. An action to recover 100l. may be a test one, and may affect far larger interests than an action to recover 100,000l. An appellate jurisdiction, based upon the theory that the pecuniary amount involved in an action is invariably the correct measure of its importance, would be both illogical and unjust.

PRESUMPTION AS TO PERMANENT TENANCY IN RESPECT OF HOMESTEAD LAND.

We report in our present issue two important judgments (5 C. W. N. at pages 846 and 858) delivered by two Division Benches of the Calcutta High Court where the learned Judges have exhaustively gone into the question as to what circumstances would give rise to presumptions as to permanent tenancy in respect of homestead land and what not. In a large number of the earlier reported cases on the subject, it has been laid down that mere long possession or the mere construction of buildings on the land will not justify any presumption as regards the permanent nature of the tenant's leases. In other cases it has been presumed that interests of a tenant must be of a permanent nature where the circumstances pointed to the fact that the original grant must have been some kind of a building-grant or where the tenant had spent large sums of money in the erection of buildings of a substantial nature to the knowledge of and without objection on the part of the landlord. (See the cases collected in Nabu v. Shabu, I. L. R. 25 Cal. 896). In view of these somewhat conflicting views and the marked tendency of the later decisions favouring the view that when the origin of a tenancy and the circumstances attending the creation of a tenancy are known, evidence as to the mode of dealing with the land demised and of the acts and conduct of the parties is not sufficient to prove the nature of the tenancy (see Ismail Khan Mahomed v. Joygoon Bibee, 4 C. W. N. 210; s. c. 27 Cal. 570; Caspersz v. Kedar Nath Sarbadhikari, 5 C. W. N. 858; Ismail Khan Mahomed v. L. P. D. Broughton, 5 C. W. N. 846) it is as well that we should set out the limitations subject to which this proposition is to be accepted. Following the maxim optimus interpres rerum usus, the nature of the enjoyment of any immovable property may be shown by evidence where the root of the title or the origin of the grant is not clearly known, (see Nidhee Kristo Boac v. Nistarinee Donsee, 21 W. R. 386), but no parol evidence of custom and usage is admissible to nullify the express provisions of a written contract. But still the plea of acquiescence and estoppel has not unoften to be considered in this connection. The most recent exposition of the law on this subject is contained in a decision of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in the case of Beni Ram v. Kundan Lal (2 C. W. N. 502; s. c. I. L. R. 21 All. 496; L. R. 26 Ind. App. 58). The word 'acquiescence,' as pointed out by Lord Cottenham in Duke of Leeds v. Earl Amherst, 2 Phillips 117, if used at all, must have attached to it a definite signification, according to whether the acquiescence alleged occurs while the act acquiesced in is in progress or only after it has been completed. In other words, if a person having a right and seeing another person about to commit, or in the course of committing an act infringing upon that right, stands by in such a manner as really to induce the person committing the act, and who might otherwise have abstained from it, to believe that he assents to its being committed, he cannot be afterwards heard to complain of the act. But when once the act is completed without the knowledge or assent on the part of the person whose right is infringed, very different legal considerations arise. (See the judgment of Thesiger, L. J., in De Bussche v. Alt, L. R. 8 Ch. D. 286; Ramsden v. Dyson, L. R. 1 H. L. 129; Plimmer v. Mayor of Wellington, L. R. 9 App. Cas. 699; La Banque, &c. v. La Banque, L. R. 13 App. Cas. 111; Wilmott v. Barber, L. R. 15 Ch. D. 96; Kunhammed v. Narayan, L. R. 12 Mad. 320; Nawin Lal v. Rameshar, L. R. 16 All. 328; Jugmohan v. Pallonjee, L. R. 23 Bom. 1, and Ismail Khan v. Jaygoon, 4 C. W. N. 210; s. c. 27 Cal. 570). To the authorities in the English and Indian Courts cited above, may perhaps be added the pronouncement of an eminent American Judge. In Wendell v. Van Rensselaer, 1 Johnson Chancery (N. Y.), Chancellor Kent says: "There is no principle better established in this Court, nor one founded on more solid considerations of equity and public utility, than that which declares that if one man knowingly, though he does it passively by looking on, suffers another to purchase and expend money on land, under an erroneous opinion of title, without making known his claim, he shall not afterwards be permitted to exercise his legal right against such person. It would be an act of fraud and injustice and his conscience is bound by this equitable estoppel." (See also 2 Pomeroy on Equity Jurisprudence, § 807). Lastly, it should be noted that acquiescence is not a question of fact but of legal inference from facts already found; and upon it the judgments of the Appellate Courts are not final. (See Beni Ram v. Kundan Lal, L. R. 21 All. 496 at p. 504; Caspers v. Kedar Nath Sarbhadhikari, 5 C. W. N. 858).

English Notes.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—QUINN v. LEATHAM. Before the LORD CHANCELLOR, LORDS MACNAGHTEN, SHAND, BRAMPTON, ROBERTSON and LINDLEY. 5th August 1901.

Trades Unions—Combination to injure pursuit of lawful calling—Conspiracy—Exercise of one's right—Infringement of another's right or liberty—Actionable wrong.

ALLEN v. FLOOD distinguished. THE MOGUL STEAMSHIP case considered.

This was another dispute relating to Trades Unions and followed closely after the decision in the Taff Vale Railway case reported in 5 C. W. N. pp. lviii and cxcxi. The law of conspiracy is considered in the judgments delivered. Lord Macnaghten's decision is principally based on it. Their Lordships distinguish this case from that of Allen v. Flood relied upon for the Appellants and reported in 1898,

A. C., p. 1. The Mogul Steamship case is considered and commented on (1892, A. C., p. 25).

The facts on which the decisions are based were as follows:—

The Plaintiff Leatham was a butcher at Lisburn near Belfast and had there for over 20 years carried on his trade. In his service were several hands at weekly wages. The Appellant Quinn is the treasurer and the other Defendants other officers of an Association established in 1893 under the Trades Union Acts 1871 and 1876, and known as the Belfast Journeyman, Butchers and Assistants Association. That society had formulated a regulation, not registered, whereby they purported to prohibit their members working with non-union men. The Plaintiff Leatham's men were of that class, non-union men, and did not consequently belong to the organization of which the Defendants were parties and officers. One of Leatham's customers was a butcher at Belfast named Robert Munce. Leatham had in his employ among others a married man with a large family who had served him faithfully for over 10 years, Leatham being desirous of keeping his servants in his employ tried unsuccessfully to conciliate the Defendants' demands. His efforts were rejected. The Defendants would not be satisfied with any terms less than the dismissal by Leatham of all his men and the replacing them by Union men. Leatham refused to comply with their request which would throw his servants on the streets. The Defendants then brought pressure to bear on Robert Munce and succeeded in alienating his custom from Leatham and the last named was placed in the "black list" of the Association and every effort was made to bring on the ruin and downfall of Leatham.

For such conspiracy Leatham commenced the present action and he obtained a verdict in the Irish Courts for damages from a jury. That verdict was upheld by the Irish Court of Appeal. Quinn alone of the Defendants now brought the matter to the House of Lords.

Their Lordships were unanimous in dismissing the appeal. The Lord Chancellor in delivering judgment said that if upon the facts of this case the Plaintiff had no remedy it could hardly be said that our jurisprudence was that of a civilized community. His Lordship accepted the judgment pronounced by Lords Brampton and Lindley.

The judgment of the last-named Lord, inter alia, stated as follows:—"In this country it is now settled by the decision of this House in the case of the Mogul Steamship Company (1892, A. C., p. 45) that no action for conspiracy lies against persons who act in concert to damage another and do damage him, but who at the same time merely exercise their own rights and who infringe no rights of other people. Allen v. Flood emphasizes the same doctrine. The principle was strikingly illustrated in the Scottish Co-operative Society (35

Scottish Law Reporter). In this case some butchers induced some salesmen not to sell meat to the Plaintiff. The means employed were to threaten the salesmen that if they continued to sell meat to the Plaintiff they, the butchers, would not buy from the salesmen. There was nothing unlawful in this, and the learned Judge held that the Plaintiffs showed no cause of action, although the butchers' object was to prevent the Plaintiffs from buying from Co-operative Societies in competition with themselves, and the Defendants were acting in concert. The cardinal point of distinction between such cases and the present is that in them, although damage was intentionally inflicted on the Plaintiffs, no one's right was infringed; no wrongful act was committed; whilst in the present case the coercion of the Plaintiffs' customers and servants and of the Plaintiff through them, was an infringement of their liberty as well as of his and was wrongful both to them and also to him. Intentional damage which arises from the mere exercise of the rights of many is not, I apprehend, actionable by our law as it is now settled. To hold the contrary would be unduly to restrict the liberty of one set of persons in order to uphold the liberty of another set. According to our law, competition, with all its drawbacks not only between individuals but between associations, and between them and individuals, is permissible provided no body's rights are infringed. The law is the same for all persons whatever their callings: it applies to masters as well as to men; the proviso however is all important, and it also applies to both, and limits the rights of those who combine to look out as well as the rights of those who strike. But coercion by threats open or disguised not only of bodily harm but of serious annoyance and damage, is prima facie, at all events, a wrong inflicted on the persons coerced and in considering whether coercion has been applied or not numbers cannot be disregarded."

The learned Lord therefore held that the objection of the Appellant that the learned Judge in summing up to the jury did not distinguish between coercion to break contracts of service and break contracts of other kinds and coercion not to enter into contracts was untenable. The learned Lord next passed on to consider the 38 and 39 Victoria, c. 86, and arrived at the conclusion that a combination to annoy a person's customers so as to compel them to leave him unless he obeys the combination although not forbidden by sec. 7 is not permitted by sec. 3 (see Lyons v. Wilkins, 1896, 1 Ch. 811). The judgment concludes by stating that Allen v. Flood though a valuable decision should not be extended so as to destroy that individual liberty which our laws anxiously guard, it should not be held that boycotting by Trades Unions in one and its most objectionable forms is lawful and gives no cause of action to its victims; so to hold would be contrary to all principles of English law and would be to do what is not yet authorized by any statute or legal decision.

Mr. Martin McGrath (Irish Bar), Mr. Vesey Knox and Mr. Fitzgerald-Murphy for the Appellant. Mr. Haldane, K. C., and Mr. F. Wall for the Respondents.

Appeal dismissed with costs.

ADMIRALTY COURT.—THE OYSTER FISHERY COMPANY v. THE OWNERS OF THE BRIGANTINE SWIFT. Before the PRESIDENT. 29th March 1901.

Admiralty Jurisdiction Act, 1861—Fisheries Act, 1868—Property in Oyster beds—Fera natura—Jurisdiction—Negligence in navigation.

The Brigantine Swift belonging to Defendants grounded on Plaintiffs' Oyster beds on September 30th, 1900. She was a Swedish vessel bound from one of her own ports to Faversham. By grounding on Plaintiffs' Oyster beds she did considerable damage to the Oysters. This was an action to recover damages for such loss. Evidence was given for Plaintiffs to show that their beds were marked out and distinguishable, and the Swift as she approached was cautioned and her attention was drawn to the injury she would cause by if she did not keep aloof. The Defendants denied those allegations and contended that she touched the ground in the ordinary course of navigation. They also took exception to the jurisdiction of the Court.

The learned PRESIDENT referred to the Mayor of Colchester v. Brooke (decided in 1845, 7 A. and E. N. S. 339) and said that that even before the Fisheries Act of 1868 such an action would hold good. There was no doubt the Court had jurisdiction to entertain this action. Oysters which were being reared were the subject of possession and he thought not fera natura. Any doubt that there may have been on the matter has been removed by the said Fisheries Act. The damage complained of in this case came within the scope of the Admiralty Court Act, 1861, which permitted actions for such damage to be brought in rem. Plaintiffs' right to these beds was subject to the right of the public to pass over it in ships in the ordinary course of navigation, but it was on this that Defendants failed, for the grounding of their vessel did not take place in the ordinary course of navigation; the Trinity Masters had found that carelessness and negligence, had been proved in the navigation of the Swift, and not only should the navigators have known that this was a place where Oysters were likely to be, but they were warned off it but disregarded such intimation. To assess the damages the matter would be sent to the Registrar who was to be assisted by merchants.

Mr. Aspinall, K. C., and Mr. Nelson for the Plaintiffs.

Mr. Lang, K. C., and Mr. Stokes for the Defendants.

REPORTS (See Index.)

TWO MOOT POINTS OF CRIMINAL PROCEDURE HAVE been settled by the Judicial Committee in the case of Subramania Iyer reported by us in this issue at p. 866. One is, to what extent, errors, omissions and irregularities in a trial are contemplated to be cured under sec. 537 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. We may incidentally mention here that a too frequent resort to this section for remedying all manners of irregularities once elicited a very witty remark from a junior pleader. In a certain case, the pleader was pointing out that the proceedings in the lower Court were not according to law, whereupon the Appellate Court enquired if that was not cured by sec. 537 of the Code. The pleader nodded assent and very deferentially observed "Yes, my Lord, that is a sort of Holway's pill that is supposed to cure all judicial distempers but we at the Bar put little faith in it." It is very gratifying, therefore, to observe that the Lord Chancellor has directed that such quack remedy is no longer to be availed of as an antidote for illegalities.

LEAVING ALONE THE LIGHTER SIDE OF THE FIRST question, viz., the curative power of sec. 537 and turning to its serious side we may mention that although Abdur Rahman v. Empress (4 C. W. N. 537; S. C. I. L. R. 27 Cal. 849) has been overruled by the Judicial Committee yet it is only by reference to the judgment and argument in that case that the full significance of the Lord Chancellor's judgment can be appreciated. The Lord Chancellor says that the disobedience of the express provisions of a statute as to the mode of trial cannot be regarded as a mere irregularity. Then his Lordship explains how misjoinder of charges may be fatal to the fair trial of the accused and naturally holds that the disregard of the procedure in this respect cannot be contemplated to be covered by sec. 537. The judges who, in the case of Abdur Rahman, maintained that the section does so, relied on the illustration added to it in the Code of 1898. The illustration says that if a Magistrate is required by law to sign and he signs only by his initials, that will be a pure irregularity and will not affect the validity of the proceedings. The Lord Chancellor also relies on the illustration as showing what is meant by an irregularity. We must say that the illustration makes it clear that it is only errors and omissions in formal matters that are contemplated to be cured by sec. 537 and not any default in the essentials of a fair trial.

THIS IS THE VIEW THAT WAS ADOPTED IN THE CALCUTTA High Court by Petheram, C. J., and Boverley, J., in two cases and by Petheram, C. J., and Ghose, J., in another (see in the matter of Luchmi Narain, I. L. R. 14 Cal. 128, Queen-Empress v. Nabadip, I. L. R. 14 Cal. 395, Raj Chandra v. Gour, I. L. R. 22 Cal. 176). The Code of Criminal Procedure has been revised since and sec. 537 itself amended and we did not understand at the time that the Legislature had any intention of getting rid of these decisions. On the contrary, we understood Sir Henry Prinsep, who was in charge of the Code of 1898, to assure the Legislature that it would not be desirable to relax sec. 537 as that would be a direct encouragement to the subordinate judiciary to indulge in irregularities. So we do not quite appreciate the position of Sir Henry Prinsep as a member of the Full Bench going against his own views and declaring that he was only reverting to the practice previous to the cases in 14 Calcutta. We can, however, understand Ghose, J., being an assenting party to his being overruled by the Full Bench, having regard to the good old Bengali saying that "in company of ten, even the wisest heads are apt to turn." It is a matter of regret that references to the Full Bench and decisions thereupon are now-a-days not very encouraging. Some recent references have the appearance of being determined by votes rather than on legal considerations. As regards this particular one we were apprehensive that such lax interpretation of sec. 537 was likely to have a most demoralizing effect both on the subordinate and the superior Courts. To the former it was a direct encouragement to disregard the requirements of the law and to the latter to save itself a great deal of trouble by a sweeping application of this one section. We must, therefore, congratulate ourselves on the salutary effect that the decision of the Judicial Committee is likely to have on our judiciary.

THE SECOND AND BY NO MEANS LESS IMPORTANT question that the Judicial Committee has settled is whether an Appellate Court can assume the functions of the jury. If a trial by a jury is vitiated by misdirection or illegalities, can the Appellate Court cancel the misdirection or sift the illegalities from the record and by reference to the rest maintain, alter or modify the verdict of the jury? The present Lord Chancellor, who is a great advocate of the jury system of trial, says that a Court cannot. This must not be regarded as a mere matter of sentiment but we shall presently see that it is perfectly sound as a proposition of law.

A DIFFERENCE OF OPINION HAS EXISTED IN THE CALCUTTA High Court in this respect since sometime past as we pointed out in these columns in Vol. IV, No 34, pp. 197-198. The conflict there noticed is that between the views of Banerjee and Beverley, JJ., in Wafadar Khan v. Empress (1. L. R. 21 Cal. 955) and those of Ameer Ali and Hill, JJ., in Taju Pramanik v. Empress (2 C. W. N. 369) and the doubts expressed by Maclean, C. J., and Macpherson, J., in Sadhu Sheik v. Empress (4 C. W. N. 576). In the case last-named, Maclean, C. J., questioned the powers of an Appellate Court to determine the case on facts after declaring the trial bad on the ground of misdirection. There too, sec. 537 was sought to be brought into requisition by the counsel for the Crown but his Lordship was not in favour of further extending it. It is also gratifying to notice that the views of the Chief Justice as expressed there, are in perfect unison with that of the Lord Chancellor on this very point. It will be noticed from our article referred to above that while we had little doubts as to the powers of the Appellate Court to finally dispose of a case on the ground of misdirection, we entertained serious doubts as to the powers of an Appellate Court to determine the case on the facts after declaring that there has been a misdirection. A Court of Appeal is certainly entitled to finally dispose of a case by the setting aside of the conviction on the ground of misdirection or illegality, as the Judicial Committee has done in the present case. But that an Appellate Court is competent to modify or alter or maintain the verdict by reference only to such facts as might have been properly put to the jury, is what the Judicial Committee deny! To gather the full import of the Lord Chancellor's judgment it is necessary to refer to the facts of the case and the argument at the Bar, both of which are fully set out in our report.

LONG BEFORE THIS MATTER WAS ARGUED AT THE PRIVY Council Bar we ventured to point out that it would never be proper on the part of a judge to remand a case for retrial by the jury after altering the verdict or, in other words, suggesting findings on facts. For that is none the less a misdirection because it is by a superior Court. The impropriety and inexpediency of such a course have since been laid bare in the case of Sadak Ali. That the case was remanded with altered findings for retrial with the aid of assessors makes no difference. The principle is the same. The Lord Chancellor says sufficiently clearly that it is no province of the Appellate Court to take the place of the jury or even to appropriate the findings of a vitiated trial to fit in with the original verdict. But still the Lord Chancellor does not discuss the question with special reference to the Code of Criminal Procedure. But this Sir Francis Maclean has done in the case of Sadhu Sheik v. Empress (4 C. W. N. 567). There the Chief Justice has taken a different view of sec. 423 from that taken by Ameer Ali, J., in Taju Pramanik (2 C. W. N. 369). Reference to cl. (d) of that section will shew that it only empowers an Appellate Court to alter or reverse the verdict of the jury on only two grounds, namely, misdirection by the judge or misapprehension of the law by the jury. The wording of the clause does not seem to warrant the view of Ameer Ali, J., that once the case is before the Appellate Court, the Court is competent to determine the case on the facts on record. Anyhow the opinion of the Judicial Committee ought to be final.

LAW AND LOGIC.

The concluding portion of the Lord Chancellor's judgment in A. A. Subramania Iyer, pointing out the illogicality of Sir Francis Maclean's judgment is hardly to be taken seriously and is meant as chaff. That this is so is evident from the Lord Chancellor having borrowed freely the very phrases and expressions in the judgment of Abdur Rahman v. Empress to controvert the proposition of law laid down there. That the Lord Chancellor was not serious about the logical discourse with which he concludes his judgment is apparent from his observations in a yet more recent and by no means a less important case. In Quinn v. Leatham, noticed by us lately, the Lord Chancellor evidently referring to Allen v. Flood observed "A case is only an authority for what it actually decides. I entirely deny that it can be quoted for a proposition that may seem to follow logically from it. Such a mode of reasoning assumes that the law is necessarily a logical code, whereas every lawyer must know that the law is not always logical at all."

The observation if seriously taken does not seem to show that the Lord Chancellor has any great regard for the science of reasoning, a supposed departure from which he took occasion so recently to ridicule. But taking the Lord Chancellor at his word, with all due deference, we must say that we cannot accept his proposition. Even if law be not always logical, its interpretation at any rate ought to be so.

Then as regards the authority of cases, no doubt, where a case is on all fours with another it is of the greatest assistance in coming to a decision. But to say that if the circumstances in another case are somewhat different no logical conclusions can be drawn from any authoritative decision for its determination is more than we can concede even to the Lord Chancellor.

The reason for treating previous decisions of a superior or of co-ordinate Courts as authorities is obvious. It ensures uniformity in the administration of the law. It would create terrible confusion if the same law was interpreted or administered by different judges in a different manner. While every judge should endeavour to secure uniformity in the administration of the law still it is at the same time very desirable that judges should not blindly follow authorities but that they should only do so logically. If an authority is exactly in point and is founded on reason all Courts ought to conform to it. If it is not, it is the province of a superior Court or that of the Legislature to get rid of it. But a Subordinate Court can only follow or distinguish a case and in so doing has often to determine why and to what extent the conclusion in an analogous case might be different. This can only be done by a strictly logical process. So we must take it that the Lord Chancellor was not quite serious in his observations regarding the relationship between law and logic, which being strained in the case before the Privy Council he took the opportunity to ridicule but which being insisted on at the Bar of the House of Lords he met also with the same weapon. Such obiter dicta do not certainly affect the merits of the respective decisions, but still they might as well have been avoided without any detriment to either.

Review.

CASE-NOTED CRIMINAL PROCEDURE CODE. By D. Swinhoe. Published by Thacker, Spink & Co., Calcutta. Price Rs. 10.

This is a handy little book, very well got up and the matter also very well arranged on a system which will surely be acceptable to the profession. The peculiarity of the system is that all the relevant cases have been carefully noted up in chronological order below each section and cross references also given. The size, get-up and notes make the work eminently useful to the practitioner. In these days when annotators give us books about ten times the size of the original Act, containing a mass of matter which one must wade through before finding anything bearing on the point one has in view, it is a real relief to find a book which within moderate compass serves the purpose of a comprehensive digest of the whole of the case law on the subject.

HIGH COURT DECISIONS OF INDIAN RAILWAY CASES. By M. Ternunkata Chariar. Printed at the St. Joseph's College Press, Trichinopoly.

This is a collection of important decisions of the High Courts of India bearing upon the law relating to Railway as carriers, and contains an appendix containing all the Railway Acts, the Carriers Act and Act XIII of 1855. It is a valuable reprint of the cases and has been neatly got up and we have no doubt that it will be found useful and handy by the profession. The want of such a book has long been felt, and we are glad to find that the author has done his best to meet it.

CALCUTTA HIGH COURT.

[CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION.]

APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE
No. 2160 of 1899.

MACLEAN, C. J.	}	SHEIKH NAIMUDDIN, Plaintiff,
BANERJEE, J.		Appellant,
1901.		"
23, August.	}	SRIMANTA GHOSH and others,
		Defendants, Respondents.

Rent, decree for—Sale in execution of decree obtained not by the entire body of landlords—Rent due for four years, for two years of which all the Plaintiffs and for other two some of the Plaintiffs were entitled—Sale, effect of—Right, title and interest of judgment-debtor or tenant, passing of—Splitting up of decree—Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), secs. 65, 188.

This was an appeal preferred on the 20th November 1899, against the decree of Babu Karuna Das Bose, Subordinate Judge, 1st Court of Zillah 24-Pergunnahs, dated the 29th May 1899, modifying the decree of Babu Probha Chandra Singha, Munsif, 1st Court of Basirhat, dated the 25th February 1898.

This appeal arose out of a suit brought by the Plaintiff for a declaration of his title to and for possession of some property described in the plaint by ousting the Defendants Nos. 1 to 9.

The facts of the case material to this report were as follows:—

The admitted landlords obtained a decree in a suit for rent in 1890-1891 against Defendant No. 3, who admittedly held a ganti jama under them. In execution of this decree this ganti was sold and purchased by the Plaintiff. The Plaintiff said that he granted a dur-ganti to Defendant No. 3, but Defendant No. 3 again defaulted in paying rent and Plaintiff sold off this dur-ganti and purchased it himself, but he was mainly resisted by Defendants Nos. 1 and 2; and he sued for recovery of possession of the ganti and dur-ganti by evicting the said Defendants, as also Defendants Nos. 4 to 9 who were sub-tenants on the land.

The Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 pleaded that the Defendant No. 3 had granted a dur-ganti to themselves and had also sold off a half share of the ganti; and hence the Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 were entitled to be in possession as dur-gantidars and as part-gantidars; they also contended that the original rent-decree in execution of which the Plaintiff had purchased was not obtained by the 16-anna landlords and hence the Plaintiff did not purchase the whole tenure free of encumbrances but only the right, title and interest of the judgment debtor; and therefore the purchase of the half share of the ganti by the Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 was to prevail. These Defendants also contended that the Plaintiff's purchase was not bona fide.

The defence of the other Defendants are not material to this report, inasmuch as the suit against them was not pressed in the lower Appellate Court.

The first Court decided against the Plaintiff on the question of khas possession but gave him a decree in part declaring his right and title to only eight annas of the ganti and giving him possession as landlord entitled to receive rent from their immediate subordinate tenants.

The Plaintiff preferred an appeal against that decree, and the Subordinate Judge on appeal held on the question whether the rent-decree was obtained by the 16-anna landlords as follows:—

"The very persons, who obtained this rent-decree, were at one time entitled to the 16-anna rent, and the first portion of the rent-suit is for the 16-anna rent, but the second portion is for rent of a period at which the landlords had ceased to be 16-anna proprietors; that is at the date when the rent-suit was filed, the landlords were merely fractional co-sharers, and hence they had no right to sell the entire tenure: Plaintiff therefore acquired his rights, as on a sale under the Code of Civil Procedure, and if the Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 had in good faith purchased a half share of the ganti, the Plaintiff was not entitled to it: on this point I agree with the first Court that the Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 had purchased to repay another decretal debt of the Defendant No. 3; it was pointed out by the Plaintiff, that the price, which the Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 are said to have paid for the half share, are disproportionately high, if the profits secured to them are considered, but it may be that there were other facts which have not been brought to light in this case; the matter is apparently suspicious, but when the Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 had paid off the debts of Defendant No. 3,

I cannot say that the purchase was colorable; and hence the Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 will be maintained in possession of a half share of the ganti jamai."

On the question as to the dur-ganti the Subordinate Judge held that the dur-ganti rent-decree was a colorable transaction and that there existed no real dur-ganti of the Defendants Nos. 1 and 2, and he therefore gave a decree affirming the first Court's decree except that it was further declared that the Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 had no dur-ganti right whatsoever and were not entitled to hold any lands as dur-gantidars and the Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 should be evicted from their alleged dur-ganti right, and that the Plaintiff therefore should get rent of an undivided half share of the ganti from Defendants Nos. 4 to 9 or from other under-tenants.

Thereupon the Plaintiff preferred this present appeal, and the only question that arose in this appeal was "whether the sale of a tenure in execution of a decree for rent obtained by certain persons who did not constitute the entire body of landlords at the date of the suit and of the decree, and who were not the entire body of landlords also at the date at which part of the claim for which the rent-suit was brought accrued due, would pass the entire tenure, or merely the right, title and interest of the judgment-debtors in the tenure at the date of the sale."

Held—That the words "the tenure or holding shall be liable to sale in execution of a decree for the rents thereof" in sec. 65 of the Bengal Tenancy Act presupposes a suit and decree under the Act, that is, a decree made in a suit in which all the landlord co-sharers are Plaintiffs and not merely some of them, that is, fractional co-sharers. Beni Madhab Roy v. Joud Lal Sarkar (I. L. R. 17 Cal. 390, F. B.) referred to.

That the sale that took place in execution of decree taken as a whole, and if it was bad as regards part of the decree as it is impossible to divide the properties sold into two parts, one covered by the sale in satisfaction of one part of the claim and the other, covered by the sale in satisfaction of the other part, the whole sale must be held to have been a sale under the ordinary law, that is, the Code of Civil Procedure and not carrying with it the incidents of a sale under the Bengal Tenancy Act.

That if at the time the suit was brought and decree obtained and enforced by the sale of the tenure the decree-holders did not constitute the entire body of landlords, the sale could not be treated as a sale of the tenure in execution of a rent-decree under the Bengal Tenancy Act.

Hem Chandra Bhunjoo v. Mon Mohini Das (3 C. W. N. 604) referred to.

Dr. Ashutosh Mukherjee and Babu Sarat Chandra Ghose for the Appellant.

Babu Sarat Chandra Roy Chowdhuri for the Respondents.

JURISDICTION IN SUITS FOR RESTITUTION OF CONJUGAL RIGHTS.

Are Munsifs entitled to try suits for restitution of conjugal rights is a question that has been raised and answered by a learned Munsiff in a manner which clearly points to the necessity of framing some rule by the High Court under sec. 9 of the Suits Valuation Act (VII of 1887) for the conferment of jurisdiction on Munsifs in such suits. In the suit of Golam Rahim v. Putima Bibi (I. L. R. 13 Cal. 232) for restitution of conjugal rights, the High Court held that such suits are not capable of any money-valuation. But our Legislature, which has always been somewhat zealous in the cause of public revenue, does not seem to believe that anything that can give rise to difference or dispute between individuals is not capable of money-valuation. After providing for the valuation of every conceivable cause of dispute, the Suits Valuation Act by sec. 9 provides in effect that even where suits of any class are incapable of being expressed in money-value the High Court may, with the sanction of Local Government, fix thereon such money-value as it pleases. Accordingly in Mowla Newaz v. Sajidun-nisa Bibi (I. L. R. 18 Cal. 378), the High Court expressed an opinion that a suit for conjugal rights is a suit contemplated by the Legislature to be dealt with under sec. 9 of the Suits Valuation Act.

But it has not apparently pleased the High Court yet to solve the problem as to how conjugal felicity or its want may be adequately expressed in money-value. The consequence of it, however, seems to be somewhat serious to those who may be either anxious to get back a recalcitrant spouse who may have asserted her independence, or for the return of a dutiful wife who may have been unduly detained under parental authority.

The rural population within the jurisdiction of every Munsif is mostly married and the chances of difference between married people are by no means rare. It is very desirable, therefore, that Munsifs should have jurisdiction of settling, so far as practicable, such differences.

Unfortunately, however, the Bengal Civil Courts Act, (XII of 1887) did not consider such contingencies when defining the jurisdiction of Munsifs. Under sec. 19 of this Act a Munsif is ordinarily empowered to try a suit, the value of which does not exceed one thousand rupees, but the law provides that he may be especially empowered to try suits up to the value of Rs. 2,000. All other suits are triable by either a District or a Subordinate Judge. Necessarily, suits for the restitution of conjugal rights would seem to be only triable by either a District or a Subordinate or an Additional Judge.

It is hard, however, on a man slighted by his wife to have to undertake a long journey with a heavy heart to the head-quarters of a district or to go in search of a Subordinate Judge in some other locality. It would be far more equitable if he could get such relief as he may, from the Munsif nearest to his cheerless home. The simplest means by which these capable officers may now be empowered to do what they may, for the distressed husbands is, for the High Court to fix some money-value on the "subject-matter" of suits for the restitution of conjugal rights under sec. 9 of the Suits Valuation Act.

But the Government receipts from court-fee stamps are already very high, and it would in every sense be opposed to public policy to set a very high value on the right to claim conjugal duties, specially, having regard to the fact as to whether a neglectful or refractory wife is worth having at any price and further, in view of the uncertainty of the relief that may be given by Courts of law in such suits. The fixing of a nominal value, however, will confer jurisdiction on Munsifs and that is all that concerns us for the present.

Review.

THE LAW OF TRADE MARKS, &C. By D. M. Kerly, M. A., LL. B.—2nd Edition by the author and F. G. Underhay, M. A. Published by Sweet and Maxwell, Ltd., 3, Chancery Lane, 1901.

This is the second edition of a book well-known in the profession. The bulk and shape of which have become larger, some parts of it having been re-written and the whole of the section of the chapter headed, the Action for "passing off," dealing with the right of a trader to use his own name, having been added. We find that the author has extended the Appendix by the addition of a number of forms and official notices including the Consolidated General Orders of the Custom House under the Merchandise Marks Acts. The book also contains a summary of Foreign and Colonial Laws of Trade. The cases have been brought down to the Whitsun vacation, 1901. Unfortunately our country is not sufficiently advanced in commerce and trade to require an exhaustive work like the one under review. In this country people more frequently rush into the Criminal Court in cases of infringement of trade and property marks than to the Civil Court, which is always to be regretted. The subject is not well understood in India and it would be difficult to find professional people who have made a study of it. An elaborate set of rules and statutes with innumerable decisions on all possible points help to confuse one, and we quite agree with the author that as things stand, the task of advising at what point, the wide advertisement and extensive use of, say, a descriptive word by a trader on a larger scale enables him to debar his smaller rivals from making use of it, is becoming more and more difficult. Some of the cases afford amusing reading. When learned Judges have to decide what words are not fancy words and which of them are invented and also to determine the standard of invention to be applied to them, the decisions are sometimes not without an element of the ludicrous. It is not always easy to understand why Borrl is a non-descriptive word, but a good "fancy-word," where as Priticumina (derived from Pritium, what) cannot be classed in the same way as the other. One is apt to look somewhat askance if the law is, as stated by Mr. Justice Kekewich in Cash v. Cash (82 L. T. 655), that a man may sometimes be restrained from using his own name and that not upon any ground of fraud. The exigencies of competition land one at strange places. If certain persons have for some years carried on business under the name of Cash, in Coventry, a real Mr. Cash unfortunately carrying on business in Coventry may apparently be called upon by a competent Court to change his name and find some other name less offensive to a rival trader. Man is inventive, specially a trading man and when he can easily change "jute" into "silken" and paper into "leatherette," he ought not to complain if the law occasionally requires him to change his appellation. We consider the present work, a very valuable addition to the literature on the subject and strongly recommend its use by the profession in India as containing, and embodying a vast amount of research and learning.

PRINCIPLES OF THE LAW OF REAL PROPERTY. By Joshua Williams, 19th Edition, re-arranged and partly re-written by his son, T. Cyprian Williams. Published by Sweet and Maxwell, Ltd, 3 Chancery Lane, 1901.

That this very valuable work has reached its nineteenth edition is enough testimony to the fact that it is greatly appreciated as such. Since the last edition the Land Transfer Act of 1897 and the Land Charges Act of 1900 have come into operation, making considerable changes in the law relating to the devolution of real estate to executors or administrators. Although chiefly intended for students, members of the profession have always found it of great value. The principles are clearly enunciated; the illustrations are appropriate and concise and the references copious throughout the work. It is hardly too much to say that the man who knows "Williams on Real Property" knows the law on the subject.

We have heard of a desire on the part of some persons in this country endeavouring to create an Estate Tail with the help of the Legislature. We would recommend to them the following passage taken from the work under review: "The policy of the law is now in favour of the free disposition of all kinds of property: and as it allows Estates Tail to be barred, so it will not permit the object of an entail to be accomplished by other means, any further than can be done by giving estates to the unborn children of living persons. Thus an estate given, after the death of an unborn child to his children would be absolutely void. The desire of individuals to keep their name in memory has often been opposed to this rule of law, and many shifts and devices have from time to time been tried to keep up a perpetual entail, or something that might answer the same end. But such contrivances have invariably been defeated: and no plan can be now adopted by which lands can with certainty be tied up, or fixed as to their future destinations for a longer period than the lives of existing person, and a term of twenty one years after their decease."

Besides giving the present law of England the work contains brief notices of the history of the process by which the law came to be settled to what it is to-day and these are none the less interesting and instructive. Reference may again be made, to the chequered history of Estates Tail and especially that of barring them, by those who are anxious to introduce this past anomaly of the English law amongst us.
